Photographs of Cave Man's Drawings Are Exhibited in Museum

Field Museum of Natural History now possesses photographs, the first ever taken, of paintings and drawings made in the fascinating "Trois Fresnes" cave in the south of France by prehistoric artists who lived more than 25,000 years ago. The cave pictures were discovered by Count Begouen and his three sons.

"One of the most interesting drawings," writes Henry Field, assistant curator of physical anthropology in the current (September) issue of Field Museum News published for the 6,000 members of the museum, "shows two small owls which had been scratched by the artist on the wall of one of the large galleries inside the cave, which goes deep into a mountain side. These two little birds are depicted sitting on the limb of a tree looking with wide open eyes at him who dares to break the age-long silence and awaken them from their centuries of total darkness within the cave.

"The prehistoric artists only rarely drew or painted birds within their magico-religious sanctuaries, and this is one of the most important examples yet discovered."

The photographs were made by the Marshall Field Archaeological Expedition to Europe, which was led by Henry Field, for use in connection with the reconstruction of such scenes in the museum's projected Hall of Prehistoric Man.

Town of Zion Is Now Legally Established

In the report of Oscar Nelson, auditor of public accounts of the state of Illinois, the town of Zion was last week established following action of the board of supervisors. Hard Road Construction in State in 1930 Passes 1,000 Mile Mark, Report

Hard road construction in Illinois passed the 1,000 mile mark for the present season on November 27, officials of the Department of Public Works and Buildings announced today. Plans provide to continue work as long as weather conditions permit.

In summarizing road construction completed this year, the department report stated that a total of 1,003.37 miles of state bond issue and state aid roads have been built this year. The work has been financed by motor licenses, federal aid and gasoline tax collections.

The state bond issue system of paved roads has been extended

784.44 miles during the season, and the state aid roads, built by counties primarily from gas tax funds, and under state supervision total 218.83 miles.

Illinois State Fair in 1931, August 22 to 29

August 22 to August 29 are the dates selected for the 1931 Illinois State Fair. These eight days were decided upon at a recent conference attended by Gov. Louis L. Emmerson, Director Stuart E. Pierson of the department of agriculture; Homer J. Tice, chairman of the state fair board; Milton E. Jones, general manager of the fair, and Walter O. Ireland, racing superintendent. The dates assure the Illinois fair of a great number of livestock entries, and an excellent racing program.
