REPORT PROGRESS IN BOY SCOUT CAMPAIGN

Lawson, Jr., chairman, $611; Libertyville, W. E. Webster, chairman, $807; Deerfield-Bannockburn, W. W. McIlvaine, chairman, $287.

Closes March 10

The area wide campaign will close formally on Tuesday evening, March 10, with a meeting of the council executive board in Highland Park, according to Henry Fowler, president of the Scout organization. It is fully expected that all towns will have secured their full quota at that time, with the exception of Lake Forest, whose committee has asked for a special extension of time, and which is pledged to their full quota of $10,000.

Workers who have pledged themselves to carry on until the total objectives in their respective towns are secured are as follows:

Burn Off Grass Prairies

The Deerfield fire department was out all day Monday burning off the large grass prairies on the west side of town. They are trying to avoid the many spring fires that endanger property and cause so many fire calls.

WELFARE CAMPAIGN OPENS HERE TUESDAY

tracts where poverty lays the dread burden of insecurity on the parents, where the spectre of possible unemployment constantly dogs the steps of the wage earner, where homes probably are cold in winter and unsanitary at any time, where it is difficult to provide the right food and clothing, where sunshine is a luxury and any kind of illness a tragedy.

The work of the Infant Welfare society is done through a staff of doctors, nurses and nutritionists. It starts with the mother during the pre-natal period at the very beginning of the child's life; the mother comes to the station for regular examination by the obstetrician in charge and the pre-natal nurse makes regular visits in the home to see that the mother knows how to follow out the advice she has received from the doctor at the station. The nurse helps her in providing the things that will be needed for the little life that is to come and the society will help to arrange hospitalization for the mother. Just as soon as possible after the birth of the baby, the mother brings him to the station, where he is given a thorough physical examination by the doctor and the mother is told what she must do to keep him well. Visits to the station are made by mother and baby at regular intervals followed by home visits by the nurse.

Everything that comes into the problem of a well baby is part of the Infant Welfare nurse's duty and in serving the baby she helps the mother to order her whole household to better advantage.

Trained in Right Habits

When the child reaches the age of two years, a nutritionist takes the place of the nurse in making the home visits. The child receives the same regular physical examination in the station and the nutritionist in the home helps the mother with all of the problems of the growing child's health. Here even more perhaps than with the service to the baby the family benefits, since providing healthy and well prepared food for her growing child necessarily leads the mother to improved standards of selection and preparation of food for the whole family and to improvement also in sanitary conditions in the home.

A fourth branch of service is provided by the Infant Welfare society through its mental hygiene department. Mothers are helped in the training of their children so that the youngsters early in life develop habits of self reliance, right eating, and proper association with the world about them.

The whole program is very simple; its results are incalculable. When an Infant Welfare child reaches the age of six years and is graduated from Infant Welfare, he comes to the public school with a sound body, the foundation well laid for a healthy life, and with habits already formed which are the best guarantee of the quality of his future citizenship.
