

NATURE LORE STUDY RECREATION FACTOR

Such Activities Urged by Community Service Bureau; Activities

"The childhood shows the man, As morning shows the day."—Milton.

It is characteristic of youth to desire knowledge — this effort continued into later life carries the machinery of the world forward.

"Knowledge of the earth, the members of the plant and animal kingdoms which people it, and knowledge of the universe of which we are a part give a foundation upon which to build wholesome leisure time pursuits, avocations, and even vocations."

Recreation Office Aids

The community recreation office encourages nature lore activities, to interest both the children and the grown up boys and girls in their environment. Collecting, picture hunting, sketching, hiking, camping, nature games, nature mapping, nature plays, gardening, nature trail and museum activities are part of the recreation program intended to acquaint one with his environment and deepen the appreciation for the interesting region in which we live.

Interesting Month

March is a specially interesting month for nature activities. It is called the month of "the wakening moon." It is the time when hibernating animals are breaking up their winter sleep—later on in the month we may hear the spring bilos peeping in the ponds. March winds awaken interest in kites and weather vanes and toy windmills. It is the time for meadowlarks, phoebes, bluebirds, robins and song sparrows and old Mr. Chipmonk may be seen above ground on the first real warm days after the snow has melted.

New Bird Houses

Now we will want to push construction on new bird houses or to put up old ones — for our feathered friends will soon be here and a good reception on their arrival will encourage many of them to linger through the season. While on the subject of nature guiding we are reminded that Enos Mills has been called the father of this activity in its present organized way. Enos Mills was born this month on the 27th day and spent most of his later years guiding tourists through the fascinating regions around Longs Peak in the Rocky Mountains and in writing on nature topics and in efforts of conservation. Thousands of boys and girls and older people have been thrilled by reading adventures of Adventures of a Nature Guide — Wild Animal Homesteads—Wild Life in the Rockies and other stories, many of which are in our own public library.
