

What Will It Matter?

A man who is debating whether or not to make his first will may naturally ask that question . . . We answer, "The man who puts an intelligently planned will in our hands as executor and trustee secures for himself and his family these benefits:

- comforting knowledge that his decisions will be in force long after he has passed out of the picture
- assurance that his property will not be scattered to the four winds but will be controlled and regulated exactly as he now wishes
- the satisfaction of realizing that his wife and children, as long as they live, will have the financial counsel and business advice of understanding people."
