Murray Outstanding Speaker Among Public Service Co. Employees

Raymond Murray, 1704 Harrison street, Evanston, proved himself the outstanding public speaker among the men employees of the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois when he captured the finals of the company's annual speaking contest last week, at the Chicago Lighting institute. This contest was the Public Service company's section of a nation-wide competition of public utility company employees sponsored by the National Electric Light association. Mr. Murray will compete March 11 at Springfield against other utility company employees for the Illinois state contest, and should he win this he will take part in the geography division contest and next the national contest.

Murray treated the contest's subject, "The Contributions of Electric Service to the American Home—and its Future Possibilities" in an unusual way. Basing his talk on the theme that living is an art, he traced the evolution of man's application of tools to further the art of living in the home from the time of human powered primitive implements to modern electric powered appliances. Dean Harrington of the Medill School of Journalism at Northwestern university, Mrs. Willis M. Graham, director of Community Development, Illinois Federation of Women's clubs, and Charles N. Wheeler, vice president of the North American Light and Power company, were the judges.

For the last three years Mr. Murray has been an employee of the Public Service company at Evanston. He has had experience in several departments and at present is employed in the gas house heating division.
