Plan to Control Flow in Fox River Soon in Effect, Report Says

Satisfactory arrangements pertaining to uniformity in flow of water in the Fox river, by means of synchronized control at points, are expected to be completed soon, Secretary E. A. Keplar of the Fox Valley federation said last week, apropos of the numerous complaints of those in control above the McHenry dam.

The Fox Valley federation has almost completed a survey of the river, securing data from complainants, from water power users, and obtaining a number of photographs. As a result of the survey thus far, Mr. Keplar said that no violations of regulations as to control of flash-boards at dams, or control at power sites, have occurred. There have been no violations of any privileges, regardless of rulings, he said. Low levels in the river are due merely to natural causes—the recent dry state of the weather, which has approached something of the dimensions of a drought.

Complaints had been registered with the federation, and with the lock-keeper of the dam at McHenry. More protests, in fact, have been reported than was the case last July and August during the severest period of the 1930 drought.

Following completion of the survey of the river, water power users and other persons interested in river water usage, will participate in a hearing before the Illinois water board, the session possibly to be held in this vicinity, with one or more of the state water board members present.

Among the lucky winners in the first series of Tune Tanglers, run in the Chicago Tribune a few weeks ago, included, Mary W. Witmer of 321 Maple avenue; Harold C. Witt, 439 Glencoe avenue; M. Darlene Fidler, 534 Lincoln place and W. E. Cunningham of 618 Homewood avenue, all of Highland Park.
