DO YOU KNOW DAFFODILS?

Daffodil is the common name for Narcissus, the same as Larkspur is the common name for Delphinium. The Narcissus are grouped in several classes. The large Trumpets or Ajax are one division, these may be white and yellow. In the next group are the Incomparabilis type, which may also be white and yellow mixed, or yellow, but the cup or trumpet is but one-half or three quarters as long as that of the Ajax type.

The Barii and Leedsii both have short cups, but while the Barii are of the yellow type, the Leedsii are always pure white, both having cups some with margins of very bright orange or yellow edged with red.

The Poetaz and Poeticus are both commonly known as Narcissus or Pheasant's Eye Narcissus. They both have a very small eye, no cup at all, but while the Poeticus has but one flower to a stem, the Poetaz usually have several flowers to a stem, which make this variety one of the most valuable of the Peasant's Eye group.

The Polyanthus group are the tender varieties used entirely for greenhouse or house purposes, in this section.

Then there are the double Narcissus, which are still another group. These come in orange, primrose yellow and white.

Then there are various single Narcissus that are also in a group by themselves, because they do not fit in with either of the varieties before mentioned. These include the Jonquils which are somewhat smaller than the Narcissus and some varieties produce three or four flowers on a stem, much the same as the Freesias.
