Brilliant Talent Makes "My Sin" a Great Success

"My Sin," a strong, emotion-filled story of a woman's regeneration, is the dramatization of Fred Jackson's thrilling story. Tallulah Bankhead, a cheap cabaret singer, kills her brutal husband in self-defense. Tried for murder, she is defended by Fredric March, a down-and-out lawyer, and acquitted. Free, she seeks to bury her past, becomes a successful interior decorator, is wooed and won by a scion of a proud and prominent family.

But her past will not stay hidden. Her reputation menaced by scandal, she is rescued again by March, who, inspired by his unexpressed love for this woman, has re-established himself in his profession. March's efforts are fruitless, but, offered a chance to go on with her marriage, in spite of her past, the girl realizes true happiness for her lies with the man whom fate sent twice to save her.

The setting of the story shifts startlingly from an indolent tropical scene to New York's brilliant millionaire world. The picture is the product of George Abbott's direction. His recent pictures include "Secrets of a Secretary," "Stolen Heaven."

Miss Bankhead's appearance in "My Sin" follows quickly after her recent sensational personal triumph in "Tarnished Lady," her first moving picture role. A daughter of Alabama's Congressman William B. Bankhead, niece of Alabama's Senator John H. Bankhead, the gorgeous new cinema star triumphed for eight years on the London stage before returning to her native land to captivate moving picture audiences.

March has been seen recently in a series of powerful roles, in "Manslaughter," with Claudette Colbert, in "Royal Family of Broadway," in "Night Angel" with Nancy Carroll. "My Sin" joins his virile talent with the exotic charm of Miss Bankhead, to make, what should be, an exciting romantic combination.

In the supporting cast are Harry Davenport, Scott Kolk, Anne Sutherland, Margaret Adams, Jay Fassett and Lily Cahill.

Tallulah Bankhead, in her latest paramount picture, "My Sin," introduces a new fashion in lounging pyjamas with a creation made of red satin with unique jacquard design. The pyjamas are cleverly cut and are comfortable, both in appearance and wear. In "My Sin," the actress is co-starred with Fredric March.

Leon Janney—Famous boy actor seen in "Courage," "Old English," "Father's Son," "The Doorway to Hell" and "Penrod and Sam." Born in Ogden, Utah.

MacFadden Directs Zane Grey Story

Hamilton MacFadden, Harvard college lawyer, and Broadway producer-director, has won his Western spurs.

"Riders of the Purple Sage," is MacFadden's first Western picture. His is a prominent New England family, his mother, Edith Hamilton having been the candidate for Governor of Massachusetts on the Independent ticket in 1928.

MacFadden started his stage career at Santa Barbara, California and continued it on Broadway. "Oh, For a Man," "Charlie Chan Carries On," and "The Black Camel" were previous Fox successes of his.

George O'Brien and Marguerite Churchill play featured roles in MacFadden's present effort, which is based on the famous Zane Grey novel.

Comedy Trio in Grafters Adventures

Three of the most amusing characterizations seen on the screen in some time are offered in "New Adventures of Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford." The picture, based on the popular George Randolph Chester stories, presents William Haines in the role of J. Rufus Wallingford, master of get-rich-quick schemes, the stage comic, Jimmy "Schnozzle" Durante, as his chauffeur, and Ernest Torrence as Blackie Daw, fellow conspirator in the fine art of relieving "suckers" of their money.

How these three bank together to concoct various fantastic schemes for hoodwinking big business men forms the nucleus for a plot which varies between straight dramatic episodes, riotous humor and romantic interest. Wallingford manages to escape the clutches of the police until he takes an interest in a charming telephone operator. Unwittingly the girl causes him to be trapped by a persistent detective, but all ends happily with Wallingford reforming and winning the girl to boot.
