

Book in Museum Tells Story of Long Extinct Colombian Indian Race

Publication of a book on "The Archaeology of Santa Marta, Colombia," was announced today by Field Museum of Natural History. The book is Part I of a series on this subject, and discusses the culture of the long-extinct Tairona Indians, presenting the results of an archaeological expedition to Colombia, South America, sponsored by Marshall Field. J. Alden Mason, formerly a member of the museum's anthropological staff, and leader of the expedition, is the author. Dr. Berthold Laufer, curator of anthropology, acted as editor. The book contains 130 pages of text, 64 photogravure illustrations, and two maps, and was printed by Field Museum Press.

Prior to the work of this expedition, little was known of the archaeology of Colombia, and practically nothing of the ancient Tairona culture. The explorer-author had to surmount difficulties presented by crude modes of travel, unfavorable weather conditions, tropical fevers, and many other obstacles to penetrate into the out-of-the-way regions where lay the ruins of old Tairona settlements containing the evidences of the long dead civilization, considered one of the highest aboriginal cultures of the Americans.

Keep Garage Doors Open When Warming Up Motor, Warning

With the arrival of cold weather, the Chicago Motor club calls the attention of car owners to the imperative necessity for keeping garage doors open while the motor is being warmed in order to avoid the danger of carbon monoxide gas which is generated by all motors when running.

"Motorists should make it an inviolable rule to open at least one door and preferably one on each end of the garage in order to permit a draft before starting their motors," the club pointed out. "Only in this way can car owners be sure that they will not become victims of this gas, which cannot be smelled or seen. It is so deadly that it may cause unconsciousness before the victim can fight his way to clear air."

"It is far better to risk a cold which might be caused by the draft through the garage than death which often follows the thoughtless practice of running a motor in a closed garage."

Five members of the Alver Nelson family of Grayslake, narrowly escaped death last week, when the Nelson automobile was struck by a Soo line southbound passenger train on the Route 20 crossing at Grayslake.

Puppet Show Success '26

Department for Boys and Girls:
We certainly were not aware of the popularity of "Jack and the Beanstalk" until last Saturday morning, when all the children of Highland Park (at least, so it seemed to us) came to see the puppet show. It was a fine presentation indeed, and we almost ran with fright when the giant cried out in blood-curdling tones—"Fe fi-fo-fum, I smell the blood of an Englishman!" We most assuredly hope Eldridge Hamlin and Stuart Smith will favor us with another of their performances.

General Store
Some day I'm going to have a store
With a tinkly bell hung over the door,
With real glass cases and counters wide
And drawers all spilly with things inside.
I'll fix the window and dust each shelf,
And take the money in all myself,
It will be my store and I will say:
"What can I do for you to-day?"

Rachel Field.
More than any other writer, Rachel Field understands children and knows what they like best to read about. You have all read of Polly who won the spelling-match in "Polly Patchwork"; you know Mrs. Soloman who peddled pretzels, Joey the organ-grinder, and others of "Pocket-Handkerchief Park"; and of course we have all read "Hitty." Now we have a third book, the same size and shape as these two, only it is called "The Yellow Shop" and it tells us of Will and Rebecca, who are twins.

"All her neighbors on Cranberry Common advised Miss Roxanna Robbins against adopting the twins. 'You're not so young as you were, and two children will eat you out of house and home. They are just the age to get mumps and measles and chicken pox and whooping cough.' But she did adopt the twins and then... well it is just too delicious to tell. Why not read it for yourself?"

Shadows
Do you know what a shadow is? If not, you better find out before you read "The Shadows' Holiday" by Larry June, or you will not appreciate the story. One day, when the sun disappeared from sight and big, black rain clouds were seen instead, all the shadows met in the woodshed to take a rest. There were Jimmy Shadow, Ball Shadow, Hen Shadow, Wheelbarrow Shadow, and a lot of other shadows. We know that little boys and girls will enjoy seeing these photographs of all the shadows that play in the garden.

Do You Believe In Fairies?

Little Glory Allison didn't even know who fairies were for she lived in a log-cabin home on one side of Little Twin Mountain, and that was all she knew of the world until she was ten years old. Then she went to school and learned to read and write and someone gave her a book of poems all about fairies. Next the most wonderful thing of all happened, for Glory's friend, Miss Penny, rewarded her with a trip to the other side of the mountain, something she had always wanted. And do you know, Glory is sure it would have been impossible without the aid of the good fairies. Now who can prove otherwise? So read "The other side of the Mountain" by May Justus, if you want to know all the things a little girl has to do who lives in the mountains of Tennessee.

Gran'ma says she hopes that when I git to be a man,
I'll be a missionary like her oldest brother, Dan,
As was et up by the cannibuls that lives in Ceylon's Isle,
Where every prospect pleases, an' only man is vile!
But gran'ma she has never been to see a Wild West show,
Nor read the Life of Daniel Boone, or else I guess she'd know
That Buff'lo Bill an' cow-boys is good enough for me!
Excep' jest 'fore Christmas, when I'm good as I kin be!

Eugene Field.
We would like to mention a new edition of poems by Eugene Field, which has recently made its appearance and is really delightful, viewed from every angle of book-making. The selection was made by Bertha Mahoney of the Book shop for Boys and Girls in Boston, and the illustrations are by Gertrude Kay. In this volume we find such favorites as "The Rock-a-bye Lady," "Little Boy Blue," and the time-worn favorite of the gingham dog and the calico cat, known as the "Duel." There are many lovely illustrations in color and many, many more in black and white.

Iron Horse
Boys, if you are interested in trains, engines or locomotives here is just the book for you and it is not too hard to read nor too heavy to carry. It begins with the Indian drag or travois and ends with the Twentieth Century Limited of the New York Central lines. In between you will find the Sail-car, the Tom-Thumb, the DeWitt Clinton, and many other interesting and fascinating types of engines. Don't fail to see the "Iron Horse" by Adele Nathan. "Merry Christmas to all and, to all a good-night."
