Highlights About The Senior Play To Be Given Friday Night, March 11th

Many surprising things have been revealed by a systematic interview of the entire cast of the Senior play. We will try in the small space allotted us to tell all that is of most interest about these senior "play-boys and play-girls."

Miss Rinkenberger was interviewed first about the progress that is being made on the play. "All is coming along fine excepting for the revolution scene. This scene is really turning out to be very troublesome. Not only do the local police authorities object to it on the grounds of disturbing the peace and quiet, but on one occasion the entire cast was arrested as suspects in the Lindbergh kidnaping case.

"But Mavern Hamilton convinced them that it was all on the level when he produced his badge as private detective, which had been given to him by the King. The King did this as he wanted someone to take care of his checkers which the Queen is in the habit of hiding."

Jeff Bennett attributes his success to his talent at passing the buck. "I'm King because I never work," is his way of putting it.

Myra Jane Hutton (she won't admit it but we know different) has taken the part of Princess because she will be near her suppressed desire, Dick Gault. In her own words—"There can never be anyone else. He's the most gentle, most bashful, and shyest beau I've ever had."

Carl Gustafson says he likes his part but he objects to Bennett's taking his role seriously. He explains, "Bennett always forces me to lose at checkers because he says his higher rank entitles him to the role of winner."

David Canmann complains that the role of Major does not entitle him to enough chevrons to attract his lady friend's notice. Confidentially he said, "I'm not satisfied with my part for I've always got to be respectful and polite."

Ewell likes his part as butler. Why only yesterday he was able to obtain five solid silver spoons because of his knowledge of magic and sleight-of-hand tricks.

Ted Pasquesi, the silent meek student, has at last shown his true feathers. "My revolution will change the maps of the world. My plans, when fulfilled, will make each child in Tonsylvania rich. Each child, when the revolution succeeds, will be given a lead penny, two telephone slugs, a rubber check, and a piece of hard tack."

Dick Gault bewails the fact that his robes of office make him appear effeminate. He isn't, really, or so he claims.

Al Meyer has lost in love and leaves Myra to Dick, but he has another interest in life—the study of "stinks" as it is termed in the dear old land of Tonsylvania. "I often retire to my laboratory where I work for days without eating—between meals. Chemistry is a great sport. I've found that the combined effect of soda and acid is invigorating, but you won't divulge it, will you? I think I'm on the verge of a great discovery—one that will make people chew more gum and buy less radios."

Frederick Granton

The role of Frederick Granton, who is King Eric VIII's secretary and who is very deeply, though secretly, in love with the king's daughter, Princess Anne, is played by Dick Gault.
