Natural Beauty of Green Bay Roadside
Is Here Described

(by Jens Jensen)

On the top of the ridge overlooking its surroundings, the Green Bay road winds its way through open country and encroaching cities. Once its way laid through dense forest skirting back of Ravinia, the Skokie marshes within view of the setting sun, stretching its tentacles far in the northwest—below its feet, the blue waters of Lake Michigan and vast outstretching prairies to where the west touches the far horizon, the rim of the earth. Voyagers, missionaries, tradesmen, Indians, and the struggle of the pioneers of the northwest have left imprints along its way. Early history is inscribed in its tracks—the history of an empire.

Native crabapples, plum, hawthorn, hazel, sumac, dogwood, oak, maple and numerous other friends of our native land still adorn its roadside, smiling to the wayfarer in blossom time to the tune of our songsters happily at home—everywhere sweet perfumes and gladness—a kindly world. During hot summer days it offers cool shade and shelter from threatening storms with a riot of colors in autumns golden days, not unlike the sunset on the western sky. A harmonious whole as it were. How wisely the Master works! He who takes his lessons here profits form mankind.

Over the eastern sky laid the soft light of a winter morning. The land was quiet and peaceful in its beautiful mantle of snow, fringed by the purple of woodlands in the haze of silvery grey. Above cumulus clouds in soft lavender floated leisurely on the azure sky. It was an ideal winter picture delicate in its rendering and joyful in its expression, not without nobility and dignity. It was intensely spiritual—a message from the unknown. One felt as a part of it all—one with God. Framed by century old oaks that knew the tramping feet of pioneers, this picture revealed itself to a lonesome wayfarer filling his soul with joy, happy for the beauty of his homeland and its friendly spirit and thankful for the gift of understanding.

Are my children's children, and yours, to enjoy this loveliness of our native land, or must so called progress destroy it all? Will ignorance and stupidity rule—or love and understanding?

Much to Its Sorrow

This country doesn't lack gratitude. It will celebrate George Washington, even though it has disregarded his advice.—Toledo Blade.
