Library for the Blind

What is perhaps one of the most important developments in library work during the year past is the Pratt-Smoot law which has placed library work with the blind on a new footing. It makes available federal funds for the manufacture and purchase of specially selected braille books for the adult blind, to be circulated through nineteen designated libraries located in various sections of the country. The administration of the fund is under the direction of the Library of Congress, but any library may borrow from the nearest regional library.

The first titles to be issued under the new system are: Willa Cather's "Shadows on the Rock and Stuart Chase's the Nemesis of American Business. They are now in the libraries and available to borrowers. Other titles in press, planned for the future, include:

The Epic of America, by James Truslow Adams.

The Rise of American Civilization, C. A. Beard.

The Old Wives' Tale, Arnold Bennett.

Canterbury Tales, Chaucer.

English Synonyms, Antonyms, and Prepositions, James C. Fernald.

The New Map of Asia, H. A. Gibbons.

The New Map of Europe, H. A. Gibbons.

Humanity Uprooted, Maurice Hindus.

Les Miserables, Victor Hugo.

The Human Habitat, Huntington Ellsworth.

Finding the Trail of Life, Rufus M. Jones.

The Conquest of Happiness, Bertrand Russell.

The Standard Operas, George P. Upton.

The Causes of the War of Independence, Claude H. Van Tyne.

The Whole Man Educated

"We realize that any permanent solution of the problems of labor, of technological unemployment, of social and economic change, can come only with more general, more effective, and more continuous education. Vocational training, in its narrower sense, will never enable us to muddle through these world-wide troubles. As L. P. Jacks says:

"I would maintain to be trained for is the proper business of education. But the vocation to be trained for is the vocation of the whole man, and not of a part of him only. There is profound difference between the two things.

"In this training of the whole man, the library can assist by encouraging him to read more widely, that he may be more broadly intelligent, more tolerant, more alert, and more adaptable. Perhaps the most far-reaching contribution of the library to vocational guidance and to this whole business of living in an unshakable world lies in the facilities offered by it to every individual for filling in the gaps in his education; for rounding out and enriching his experience vicariously through reading; for gaining a background, and possibly, eventually, an ability to think things through to successful adjustments and the real satisfactions life." — A.L.A. Bulletin.

Read Before You Travel

The "Skipper" of the Cunard Running Tide now and then talks of the value of reading in connection with travel. In a recent number he quoted from a member of the Travel club "Have I got to read before I travel?" The "Skipper" says this is equivalent to saying—"Must I open my eyes if I want to see?"

He continues — "Every member should desire to see, both through the mind and through the eye. What the mind cannot interpret the eye cannot see. By appropriate reading one may quicken the grasp of the mind, one's sight becomes more keen, looking becomes observing, width and breadth are added to one's horizon.

"To know England through Shakespeare, the Reich through Goethe, Italia through Dante and the earth and its fullness through seasoned geographical observers, is a better and deeper form of knowledge than that which you may gain through news paragraphs, economic unreason, make-believing and political hodgepodge."

Numismatics

If you are a connoisseur or only a collector mildly interested in old coins, there is a treat in store at the public library. Mr. R. R. Robinson, a resident of Highland Park, has placed on exhibit in the north wall cases a few pieces from his large collection of coins, together with some books and pictures on numismatics.

Lawns

Lawns and How to Make Them, by Leonard Barron.

Lawns, by F. F. Rockwell. 1927.

— A handbook on the planning, making and maintenance of lawns. There are chapters on lawn tools and their care, weeds and pests, and lawns for special conditions.
