

The Financial "Power-House" of the Community

What is a bank? Is it just a money warehouse where cash is kept in storage?

A bank is a financial power-house, generating current to keep the wheels of business turning. It transforms money into the electricity of credit and makes one dollar do the work of ten.

There would never be enough money to do the business of the world, if it were not for our banks. In the United States we transact business to the amount of hundreds of billions of dollars annually, with only five billions of actual circulating money.

One of a series of messages published to promote better understanding between banks and the public sponsored by
ILLINOIS BANKERS ASSOCIATION
33 N. LA SALLE STREET - CHICAGO

We do ninety-five per cent of our business by bank check and promises to pay of one kind or another. By bookkeeping between our system of twenty thousand banks, we add money to one account and subtract money from another in a different part of the country, without a single dollar bill changing hands.

You need the services which banks are able to render. Your community cannot do without them. In turn, the banks need the patronage and co-operation of their depositors. Only by confidence in each other and by service to each other can banks and their depositors mutually benefit and profit.
