

Let Us Get Back to First Principles

For America, the way out of present troubles is the road back to first principles—to courage, thrift and co-operation.

The broad trail of speculation and extravagance which led to 1929, has taken us far away from the pioneer qualities which made this nation rich and great.

Now we are returning to the safe road.

With courage and faith—not fear—in our hearts, we are going to follow once more the old familiar ways of individual thrift and co-operation.

This cannot be an affair of the few only. Every citizen in every community should be in step with progress.

Back to first principles—to courage, thrift and co-operation!
