

The Bank an Answer to a Public Need

A BANK is not an enterprise conducted for the exclusive benefit of the few men who happen to be its officers. It could be better described as the people's own co-operative plan for gathering together the money of the community and making it work for the good of all.

On the bank's list of stockholders will be found some of the ablest and most public-spirited citizens of the community. Its resources are largely devoted to the development of local enterprise. Its service helps the community; it helps to make business better, and your property more valuable.

Therefore, whether you are, or are not, a depositor, you have a close personal interest in the success of your local banks.
