LOSES LIFE TRYING TO SAVE HIS BABY

Robt. Dreiske and Infant Son
Die in Flames of Burning Home Sunday

Robert Dreiske, 32, lost his life early Sunday morning in a vain effort to save from the flames in his burning home his infant son, Robert, Jr., aged 13 months. The bodies of the father and child were found by the Highland Park firemen near the threshold of the Dreiske home, 1311 Burton Avenue, Ravinia, after the fire had gutted the interior.

Aroused by Smoke

Dreiske and his wife and a cousin, Sheila Langlands, 13 were aroused by smoke in the house about 4:30 Sunday morning and managed to reach the outside according to testimony at an inquest held Sunday. Dreiske and his wife each supposed the other had rescued the baby, and when the father discovered that the child was not with them, he dashed back into the burning building. He and the baby were found on the threshold of the bedroom where the child had been asleep in his crib. The house was a frame structure of three rooms, into which they had recently moved.

Interior walls of the cottage were composed of an inflammable variety of wallboard. The fire, according to Fire Chief E. C. Hoskin of Highland Park, appeared to have been caused by a coal heater in the kitchen. Dreiske left the draft open when the family retired and the overheated pipe apparently set fire to the wallboard through which it passed, Chief Hoskin said.

Flames Envelop Home

The cottage was enveloped in flames when the firemen arrived. The firemen played a hose into the bedroom, where Mrs. Dreiske told them she had last seen her husband and were enabled to enter the room with gas masks within a few minutes, but Dreiske and his young son were already dead.

Dreiske was an accountant employed by the William A. Baehr organization, consulting engineers at 232 South Clark street. He was a son of Hermann Dreiske, retired Chicago coal and lumber merchant, who now lives at 242 Roger Williams avenue, Ravinia, and a brother of Edwin F. Dreiske, local florist.

Funeral Tuesday

The funeral was held at 2:30 Tuesday afternoon, at the United Evangelical church, and burial was in Lake Forest.
