

Three Burglaries in Waukegan Total Over $3,000; Loot Listed

Three burglaries perpetrated last Tuesday night and Wednesday in Waukegan netted the marauders approximately $2,000 in Oriental rugs and cash and checks believed to total nearly $1,000, according to reports made to the Waukegan police.

The places entered were the residences of G. T. Cherrington at 2224 Corona road, the Shell Oil company offices on the lake front and the offices of the Texaco Oil company on Market street.

Mr. and Mrs. Cherrington, who had left home early returned at 11:30 o'clock Tuesday night and found that their home had been ransacked. Patrolman George Heckinger answered the call and learned that the burglars had apparently picked the lock on the back door and, leaving by the front door, had used a truck to carry away $2,000 worth of Oriental rugs. Drawers full of silverware, and two fur coats hanging in a closet were not touched. The burglars had dumped out a box containing jewelry which might have been converted into a considerable amount of cash, but they did not take any of the articles with them.

Cottage Owners Plan Appeal from Order of Court in Damage Suit

Lake Zurich cottage owners plan to appeal from an order entered by Circuit Judge Edward Shurtleff in Woodstock demanding them to pay $7,250 damages to August Froelich and Margaret Pearce for damages resulting from a temporary injunction.

Of this amount $5,000 is to go to the defense attorneys, Runyard & Behanna, and Werner Schroeder. The court refused to allow expenses for witnesses.

Attorneys Sylvester Taylor and O. W. Nelson, who represented the cottage owners, were given 60 days to prepare their appeal.

The cottage owners petitioned an injunction two years ago to restrain Froelich and Mrs. Pearce from preventing boating, fishing and bathing in the lake on the presumption that it was a navigable body of water and therefore government and not private property.

The supreme court held the lake to be the private property of the two, and gave them full jurisdiction over it.

Froelich and Mrs. Pearce sued for attorney's fees and for damages caused by the injunction that precluded them from getting revenue from the lake for a summer.

Runyard and Schroeder are preparing to sue the state for damages for an injunction sought when the state's attorney intervened. Testimony will be identical to that offered against the cottage owners, who claimed they had riparian rights when they sought the injunction.

Chicago Man Charged with Theft of Bees by Long Lake Owner

Anton Kro, 46 years old, of 1808 South May street, Chicago, last week had apiary trouble.

Anton picked up a couple of hives of bees at Long Lake that didn't belong to him, and as a result, Joseph Boeck, owner of the apiary showed his displeasure by having Kro arrested.

Kro was seen loitering around the place and when he was arrested, according to Justice George Richardson, of Round Lake, he denied that he stole the two hives.

Boeck got a search warrant, however, and found the hives, stripped of both bees and honey.

Kro said he knew nothing about bees or honey being absent but confessed taking the hives.

Boeck has a civil suit against Kro for $200 besides the criminal warrant charging larceny. The hives were built specially and the bees were from very good families and a little more valuable than the ordinary run of insects.

A smoker, mask and gloves were found in Kro's car, Richardson said.
