Gas Transmission By High Pressure Means
a Dependable Supply

Members of the younger generation are apt to smile when their elders start talking about the hardships that had to be endured even as late as twenty years ago. Time tends to erase the memories of past experiences; nevertheless, if such situations were to reappear now, people would be aghast.

One condition common a quarter-century ago, particularly in smaller towns, was the uncertainty of the gas pressure. Inevitably, the lowest ebb of pressure came during the preparation of the Thanksgiving turkey and during the cooking of Sunday's dinner, when everyone had all burners turned wide open. That such conditions do not exist today is due in a large measure to pioneering done by engineers right in this territory.

The North Shore Gas Company was one of the first in this country to perfect the high pressure transmission system for gas. This required the installation of powerful steam-driven and special steel pipe lines but it definitely insured North Shore residents of a perpetually dependable gas supply.

"How d'yer like yer new boss, Mame?" asked one stenographer of another on the elevated.

"Oh, he ain't so bad, only he's kind of bigoted."

"What yer mean, bigoted?"

"He seems ter think that words can only be spelled in his way."—New York Watchman-Examiner.

She's a perfect hostess—

and she's equally good at checking a battery

You'd never suspect from watching Mrs. Stone welcoming her guests for an afternoon of bridge that she also personally looks after the servicing of the Stone car, checking its tires, the battery, keeping the radiator full, seeing that the oil is changed every thousand miles and that it gets proper lubrication.

And she's not a mechanic either. She's simply a competent housewife who's found that with the help of Cheerful Stan at the nearest Standard Station she can do a better job of taking care of the car than by leaving it to Mr. Stone, who like most husbands does it when he can find the time.

The next time the head of the house says, "The car needs to be checked over, but I don't see when I'm going to find time for it," why don't you take the job off his hands and drive the car in for service yourself? Standard Servismen will do the job as carefully and correctly for you as if your husband were there to supervise them.
