Tips on Saving Gas

Through daily contact with people who use gas for various purposes, the North Shore Gas Company has accumulated a number of suggestions that may be beneficial to customers who are striving for maximum economy.

One of the most profitable habits in this connection is to avoid turning burners too high and leaving them burning when there is no heating work to be done. For ordinary cooking purpose, the small burners are usually fast enough. The largest burners are only required for exceptionally large work or when highest speed is desired. Even then, it is often possible to replace the utensil over a simmer burner as soon as its contents reach the boiling point.

Gas heat is available instantly; therefore, there is no need for lighting a burner until the food is actually ready to go on the fire.

In the case of water heaters, there is a tendency to heat the water to a temperature higher than necessary. It will be found more economical to heat the water to the temperature that is actually required rather than to raise it to an excessive temperature and then add cold water.

Careful application of insulation to tanks and hot water pipes is another practice which may pay good dividends. Tests show that in some cases insulation may reduce heat losses by as much as 75 percent.

In addition to these suggestions on how to save gas, it is interesting to note that there are some instances when the increased use of gas also makes for economy. Such opportunities often occur during the fall and spring when it will be found much more economical to light up a small radiant gas heater or grate to break the chill in a room rather than to start up the regular heating plant.

MAKE A WILL Dave Thomason's plans usually worked out well, in time - he was inclined to put things off. Dave talked with his banker several times about making his WILL. He knew just what he wanted done with his wealth if he died; but he never wrote his WILL. When Dave died the court appointed his bank to settle his affairs. While the bank knew his plans, they could not do as Dave desired for he failed to leave a legal record of his plans, - a WILL - so they had to obey the common law which upset things badly. If you have plans for your estate, then be sure to write them legally - MAKE A WILL - so they can be honored. Come in and talk with us about it. HIGHLAND PARK STATE BANK Qualified as a Trust Company
