Your Home Grounds

by Fritz Bahr

PLANTING YOUR HOME GROUNDS

HARDY LILIES

Compared with other so-called hardy plants, but little attention in the average home ground is given to lilies, yet they are stately subjects, belonging in every assortment we make use of in the perennial border. No special attention or soil preparation is required in order to have hardy lilies do well. If your soil happens to be of a clay nature, no harm is being done, but where the bulbs are to be planted, it is well to work in a good layer of sand as well as a fair amount of bonemeal and always plant the bulbs not less than five inches deep—that is with the exception of Lilium Candidum or Madonna Lily, for which a depth of from three to four inches is sufficient.

As is the case with practically all other hardy plants, for best effect, always plant from three to five bulbs in a clump or group and after the planting, put in a good-sized stake to designate the location. Planted on a well drained soil, most lilies will thrive and flower for years, but even if this is not always the case, planted during fall, they should more than pay for themselves in the show they make the first and second year.

FIVE GOOD LILIES

Lilium Regale, or Royal Lily, is not only one of the showiest of all, but perfectly hardy with us. It will grow up to four feet in height, often carrying all the way from four to eight large blossoms during July, and the present is the best time for planting. Lilium Candidum, or Madonna Lily, has been a favorite for a century or more. Like the Regal Lily, it is white in color and grows about three feet in height. Lilium Speciosum is the pink lily flowering during August, also perfectly hardy. The Auratum or Sacred Lily of Japan, produces enormous flowers of a creamy white with brown spots also blooms during August, but unfortunately it is not always hardy with us after the first year, but being showy is well worth planting. The Tiger Lily, orange in color, will produce long stems and heavy flower heads year after year and when once established, needs but little care.

There is a long list of other beautiful lilies, but for the beginner, it is the above list of five which we might well consider as the most important.

IRIS

It would require a large book to go into the subject of iris and name all of the many hundreds of varieties and sorts of iris there are, but there are three classes of them and about a dozen or so sorts which will answer nicely for the smaller home ground. The large flowering German iris are the most popular, coming in many shades and colors, from an almost pure white and yellow to a deep orchid-like flower and by many are even preferred to the German type. They do not come in the clear or distinct colors. However, they are well worthy of a space in the hardy border around the pool or in connection with the water garden. The Dwarf iris of the Pumila type are ideal for the rock garden, some sorts hardy, growing over six inches in height, and as is the case with the others above mentioned, can all be planted to advantage in the late summer or fall.

PEONIES

You can't call a garden complete without peonies and there is hardly anything we might mention requiring less care or even when neglected keep on producing a mass of blooms each season. If I had to name three of the best, I would head the list with Festiva Maxima, pure white with red blotches and sweet scented. This variety was introduced, by the way, in 1853 in France, and in spite of all the thousands of new sorts introduced since, it is still considered the queen of all peonies, scoring as high on the exhibition tables as any. Mons. Jules Elie is a fine glossy pink and a splendid keeper, and the Karl Rosenfeld, I consider the best red.

While any ordinary soil will do nicely for both the iris and peonies, for the latter to dig over-deeply, to a depth of 18 inches, is better than 15, and mix the soil you plant in, well with either decomposed manure or a five-inch pot of bonemeal. Allow 15 inches between the iris and not less than 30 inches between the peonies.

Next week, we will take up a few of the most popular perennials or hardy flowering plants and also offer a few suggestions on the preparation and planting of perennial beds or borders.

Deerfield Drama Club Gives Play Nov. 10

The St. Paul's Young People will again appear in a dramatic production under the title "Attorney for the Defense," to be presented to the public on November 10, at the School Auditorium.

For the past eight years dramatics has been one of the major educational and social enterprises of the Young Peoples department of St. Paul's Evangelical Church. It has for its purpose the training of young people in the arts of dramatics and to stimulate their creative gift for strong individual expression. It occupies much of the young people's leisure time and the public presentations incidentally provides financial support to the young people's work of the church. Recently this department has been reorganized under the name St. Paul's Dramatic League, incorporating in its organization the Community Dramatic League. As such it confines its choice of dramatic talent not only to the membership of the church, but heartily welcomes the support and co-operation of outstanding dramatic talent.

Past productions have all been of the highest standard and were welcomed with great enthusiasm on the part of the public. The League assures the public that "Attorney for the Defense" when presented Friday, Nov. 10, will in every way support past reputations and standards. A synopsis of the play and the cast will be published later.

Rummage Sale in Deerfield Saturday

Ladies of St. Paul's Church will continue their rummage sale Saturday, Oct. 28, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Rain greatly interfered with the sale on the second day last week. Due to the fact that many things remained and more fine articles have been promised for this week, it was considered advisable to continue with the sale. The rummage sale will be held in the store room north of the Vant and Selig real estate office on Waukegan Road in Deerfield.

Bates, principal of the Deerfield Grammar School, acting as Rotarian of the day, gave the Deerfield Rotary Club members a half hour mental test for college entrance examination supplied by Harold Richardson, psychologist at Deerfield-Shields High School. Mr. Bates said they all graded their own papers and were exemplary students, although he did not see their answers.

E. B. Jordan is today's Rotarian and has planned a good program.
