There is no good reason why a bridal wreath spiraea should become too heavy with bare stemsan unsightly object to behold. This fine flowering shrub, in fact one of the most showy we have, as well as all other early flowering varieties should receive a proper pruning or heading back, just as soon as the plants are through flowering, which s usually in early summer. By so doing the plants can not only be kept at a desired height and shape, but instead of an over-hanging top, parents live here. young growth from the base of the of the plants should be done as on County Tuberculosis Association. shrubs pruned back after that period speak English. means the loss of flowers for the following summer. A Few Suggestions Never crowd shrubs. You can't behold a Spiraea, Hydrangea, Lilac, or Weigelia at its best except the plants have ample room for proper development. It can't be done in a border where hardly two feet of space is allowed between the plants. Hardly any of the shrubs we use for border or foundation planting require special preparation of the soil. Not to say that it isn't well to dig Hao the soil over deeply or to work into the surface, after planting, a good layer of well decomposed manure or other fertilizer. For foundation planting always select varieties which are of dwarf habit, such for instance as some of the white flowering dwarf Spiraea or that charm- they do much. ing pink sort, Spiraea Frobelii, the Japanese Barberry and the new dwarf purple leaf one, Deutzia gracilis, and others, not less than three feet of space should be allowed between the plants. A competent gardener can prune many shrubs in a few hours if the plants are gone over once a year. Three or four dollars spent each year will keep the shrubs on the average small home grounds in proper condition. If you have a shrub border where the plants are crowded at present, don't be satisfied with severe pruning, but remove some of the plants and by so doing give the remaining ones a chance to again develop into showy specimens. They will do it. You can cut a honeysuckle overgrown and disfigured almost down to the ground and it will send up beautiful plant. A hedge of Siberian privet, honeysuckle, barberry or spires makes as fine a fence as any one could wish for, doesn't cost one-half as much as a good heavy wire fence, and is a thing of beauty for many years. Shrubs of all kinds may be planted during fall as well as in new shoots from below and in the
