A few days later a bill comes covering the electricity used in the preceding 30 days. Most people call it their "light bill." As a matter of fact, it's much more than that. Electricity does much more than illuminate the average home: it sweeps rugs, runs a radio, washes and irons clothes. It makes toast, bakes waffles, warms up drafty corners. Often it provides healthful refrigeration, mixes food, ventilates the kitchen, tells accurate time. Electric service makes homes more comfortable for the whole family. It makes home chores easier for the homemaker. And its cost is but a small item in the home budget.
