ELECTRICITY'S VALUE

Every minute in the day you are making at least one use of electricity. So essential is electricity that it would be difficult to estimate its value in our daily lives—in time and money saved—in labor saving—in convenient lighting and even in entertainment brought over the radio. Electrical engineers have brought you so many time and labor saving appliances that in the modern world of today less than half of your home use of electricity is for lighting. And, regardless of your demands, day or night, in winter or summer, electricity will always be there at your command, provided by a highly-trained organization skilled through long years of service and backed by the most modern plant and distribution system that human ingenuity can provide.
