Miss Jessie Binford Addresses League of Women Voters Here

Miss Jessie Binford, in her address last week before the Highland Park League of Women Voters, said "Our great responsibility toward the children of the nation has not yet been recognized."

"We fail the child in his home, when that home is an underprivileged, uneducated one; we have failed him in the school, when the first things in a period of retrenchment are those very attempts to compensate for what is lacking in so many of our poorer homes. The church has failed the child by neglecting to give him a moral rudder by which to steer his life. The State has failed him by a carelessness and lack of understanding in the treatment of delinquent children. The community fails the child by the consistently low quality in the moving-pictures, the newspapers, and its other commercialized amusements, as well as by the bad example of general lawlessness in business."

"But more than anything else, industry fails the working child. Its tremendous pressure is exerted at every moment. It exposes him to actual physical and moral dangers, it causes inadequate training for life and for the job, and it prevents adequate emotional satisfaction throughout his working life."

Industry fails the working child. Its tremendous pressure is exerted at every moment. It exposes him to actual physical and moral dangers, it causes inadequate training for life and for the job, and it prevents adequate emotional satisfaction throughout his working life."

Miss Binford, who is Superintendent of the Juvenile Protective Association, spoke in behalf of the Federal Child Labor Amendment, which, though ratified in Illinois, will demand a large amount of public support to pass the required number of 36 states.
