that it will be smaller. But furniture is to be reproduced authentically and the entire surroundings are to be recreated. There will be a village green in front of the building on which fetes and costume affairs will be held under D.A.R. sponsorship.

Five hostesses a day will receive guests at Mount Vernon, making a total of 700 D.A.R. members who will serve during the five months of the fair. There will be lectures in the lecture hall and series of lantern slides on colonial life will be exhibited at regular intervals.

Outside the gleaming white portals of Mount Vernon, which will be like a cameo set down in the midst of the fair, will be a real colonial town. Reproductions of the houses of Paul Revere and Eetay Ross, of the Old North Church and the old State House, of a village blacksmith shop, of the House of Seven Gables, of a colonial kitchen and a host of real New England scenes will be seen.

A panorama of the Landing of the Pilgrims is being erected and everywhere will be colonial atmosphere. Town criers and stage coaches, characters in colonial costumes and shops in keeping with the early American period will be on the village streets.

The D.A.R. exhibit will be the focal point of all activity in the village.
