A. and P. Celebrating Its 75th Anniversary

The last three-quarters of a century have seen greater improvement in the methods of cooking than all the previous centuries of human history," says a famed restaurateur, George Rector, who is writing a series of articles for the 75th anniversary celebration of The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company. In the first article, which deals with the 1850's, Mr. Rector says, "In the late 50's the cooking range was invented to take the place of the brick oven. After this, change was rapid. Coal replaced wood as fuel, only to be superseded by gas and electricity.

"Foods have also changed," continues Mr. Rector, "not only have a great variety of new foods been introduced, decade by decade, but the old standbys have been greatly improved and made available the year round. In looking through some of the old cook books, for instance, I find all of them give directions for roasting coffee and curing ham. These were home operations in the 50's.

"I also find many recipes for making 'mock' dishes. Apparently some of the families were forced to use substitutes if they wanted to save money. Dandelion coffee is one of the horrible concoctions which I distinctly do not recommend. The recipe says that it 'produces an inclination to sleep when drunk at night.' I don't doubt it. I should think it would produce an inclination to sleep all day.

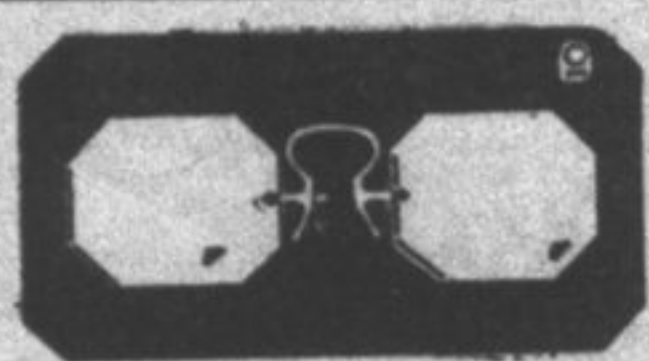

"A mock apple pie is another of the fearful foods of the 50's. It was made of soda crackers sugar, water, egg, and lemon. I would like to meet even one man who ever tasted it," says Mr. Rector in conclusion.
