

EXMOOR'S NEW SWIMMING POOL

It has been said, half-facetiously and half-seriously, that some of this country's most important projects are begun in some locker-room. While no general survey has ever been made in this connection, there are those members of Exmoor who remember the serious discussion of a swimming pool for Exmoor, that took place in the men's locker-room years ago.

Now this project is a certainty. And by June of 1935 it will be a fact. By the time out-door swimming weather arrives, the members of Exmoor Club will be splashing contentedly, or executing swan dives with varying degrees of success, into a $35,000 pool which promises to be the finest of its kind in this section of the country.

Judge Francis E. Baldwin, Exmoor's president, has announced that the Exmoor pool will be in keeping with the very high character of all this famous club's equipment. "We feel," says Judge Baldwin, "that the new pool will be highly gratifying to every member. A pool is the only thing I can think of that has been lacking at Exmoor in the past, and from the designs and specifications, I am satisfied that the finished pool will live up to our ideals of the beauty, refinement and graciousness of everything our club has, or does."

The Exmoor pool was designed, according to Mr. Melville S. Flynn, chairman of the Swimming Pool committee, by Architect Ralph D. Huszagh. The pool itself is to be 75 feet in length, 35 feet in width, and meets in every detail the necessary specifications for championship swimming and diving meets. It is to be built immediately to the south of the men's locker-rooms, and will include two special dressing rooms at the eastern end. The pool itself will be completely encircled by a 25 foot two-level terrace, surrounded by an enclosing garden wall. The upper level of the terrace will be a large semi-circular garden terrace from which one has an attractive view of the Exmoor golf course.

The exterior design of the new project will be in the Georgian style architecture to conform with the adjoining clubhouse. The interior will be in bright colors to recall the decorations of the baths of Pompeii. Unquestionably, the new pool will be a continuous scene of pleasant activity during the club's summer season.
