"King Lear" Opens at Studebaker Theatre With Globe Players

December 25 is a red letter day for the Old Globe Theatre Players of the World's Fair, for after a successful road tour they are moving into their new home—the Studebaker theatre on Michigan Avenue.

"King Lear" our most ambitious "streamlined" Shakespearean play will be given for the first time," said Thomas Wood Stevens, director.

"Two plays will be given at each performance. On the opening night this tragedy will be followed by the comedy 'As You Like It,' which program will continue at the evening performances for the following week."

The Studebaker theatre is selected for our new home because it more readily conforms to our effort to resume our method of presenting the plays at the Fair," said Marc T. Nielsen, president.

"All of our experimenting at the Fair and on tour proves conclusively that our patrons wish to see the plays in the replica of the old Globe Theatre, which permits the audience to be 'nose to nose' with the players."

The second week's program starting Dec. 31 will be "King Lear" and "As You Like It" for matinees at 2:30 for Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The night performances will consist of "Midsummer Night's Dream" and "All's Well That Ends Well."

In addition to the popular prices, H. C. Howard, manager, is offering special rates to schools, colleges, clubs and social organizations in parties of ten or more. This has resulted in many reservations from suburban groups who missed the Globe Theatre Players at the Fair.
