This Week in Washington

by RALPH E. CHURCH

Rep., 10th Congressional District Since Monday, the day of the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court that the NRA was unconstitutional, Congress has been marking time. The capital atmosphere is one of uncertainty, with the administration leaders holding almost daily conferences in a somewhat desperate effort to salvage what it can from the wreckage of the New Deal program. The House ways and means committee, which had previously decided to report a bill for a two-year extension of the NRA, and the Senate finance committee, which has supported a bill which passed the Senate extending the NRA for ten months, have been giving study to legislation for a would-be new NRA.

Moreover, the decision has caused much apprehension as to the constitutionality of pending legislation which the administration anticipated having enacted at this session. The proposed amendment to the AAA was recommitted by the Senate to its Agriculture committee for further study and serious doubts are raised with respect to the constitutionality of the proposed 30-hour week, the controversial Wagner labor disputes bill (which has already passed the Senate), and the proposed public utility holding company bill. The future of a number of agencies set up by the President upon a basis of the broad authority given him in the National Recovery Act enacted by the last Congress is in question.

Monday was a red letter day for the New Deal. In three unanimous decisions the Supreme Court ruled that the Congress and the President had exceeded their authority. The NRA was declared unconstitutional, the Frazier-Lemke Act was declared unconstitutional, and the Court held that the President had no right under the law to oust the late William E. Humphrey as Federal Trade Commissioner simply because the President decided "his politics" was not acceptable. The reason for the President's dismissal of Humphrey was stated in a letter to him requesting his resignation: "the work of the commission can be carried out most effectively with personnel of my own selection."

It has been my personal opinion that the people of the United States have not fully realized what a serious challenge the New Deal has been to the American constitutional form of government. The decisions of the Supreme Court should focus attention on that fact and they have, if nothing else, tended to show that the Congress has been legislating away powers which rightfully reside with the representatives of the people. While an emergency has undoubtedly existed and there has been a certain need for extraordinary steps for remedying the pressing situation, it is not within the province of the Congress to delegate broad legislative powers to the executive office, who in turn delegates them to some agency or official or group of officials, without providing the specific limitations or without regard for the Constitution. The simple declaration of purpose as set forth in the preamble of a bill, which is always noble in intentions, is not sufficient. Rather it is the duty of Congress to fine the policy. Instead the Congresses (73rd and 74th) of the New Deal have been passing bills making the President the executive, the legislature and the judiciary.

The Supreme Court took that position in the "Oil Control" case, which it declared unconstitutional for reason of the broad delegation of legislative powers; and it again took that position in connection with the NRA. To all intents and purposes the President has been made virtual "dictator" over the whole of business, finance, trade, commerce; in short, every phase of American economic life. It is not a question of the sincerity of the executive, but there is involved a question of long-time governmental policies. It is not solely a question of merit in certain phases of the legislation, as to its purposes; but it is also a question of preserving the fundamental principles of a representative form of government. The Supreme Court has called a halt to the New Deal's disregard for those principles.

That does not mean legislation cannot be enacted which will bring about economic recovery, remove the abuses in the economic system, afford relief for the people in their hardships. Such can be accomplished and should be accomplished. But the Supreme Court has said that the Congress must take the necessary steps upon the basis of the principles set forth in the Constitution, which, in the last analysis, represents the charter of rights for the whole people. If legislation can now be enacted which will meet the situation and be in accordance with American governmental principles, it is fair to say that it could have been done that way in the first place, without creating the uncertainty which has followed the court's decision of the unconstitutionality of the whole program.

Big Doings by Every "Iron Horse" June 10

Chicago, Ill.—A whirlwind of enthusiastic approval and pledges of cooperation throughout twenty-four states of the Union have been the immediate results of an announcement that railroad week would be celebrated June 10 to 15, it was announced.

Chairman Harry G. Taylor of the Western Association of Railroad Executives pointed to his desk with telegrams and letters from business men, heads of trade organizations and other leaders of cities and towns. Each of them explained, breathed a sigh of relief, most spectacular celebration of America's transportation history.

The iron horse will not only "come home" in spick-and-span new houses to the public during the week, but will lift its wheels to the most tremendous salvo of celebration heard since the first Armistice day, the locomotive "chorus" heard from the Great Lakes to the Pacific Ocean and from Alaska to the Rio Grande river on the opening day of railroad week at an hour late to set.

The word "pouse" does not mean a married person. The word really means a person promised in marriage, and comes from the Latin, "spondeo," meaning "I promise."
