

Your Safety Brakes

Among the amendments recently proposed at Washington are several whose effect would be to scrap the Constitution and the Supreme Court and assign all their authority to Congress.

Is Congress worthy of so overwhelming a vote of confidence? Is it capable of exercising wisely such vast powers? Let's see what it might mean to us in America, if Congress, uncontrolled by the Constitution, were suddenly to have all the authority now exercised by certain legislative bodies and dictators in Europe.

It could mean, for example, the end of Home Rule. A majority of Congressmen, thus free of constitutional restraints, could, if they desired, supplant your own mayor or governor with a dictator or administrative commission from Washington. They could change the land laws of Pennsylvania, the election laws of Georgia, or the traffic laws of your home town. And, short of revolution, you'd have to take it and like it.

It could mean the death of personal liberty in America. If a majority of unhampered Congressmen didn't like your religion or your politics, or your economic theories, they could pass laws to jail or expatriate you for them.

Suppose a majority in Congress wanted to penalize you for too free an expression of your political opinions...

Suppose they decided that you couldn't attend any neighborhood political rally under penalty of going to jail...

Suppose they determined that your children shouldn't go to the schools of your choice, but only to schools approved by Washington...

Suppose they wanted to take your home away from you without compensation to erect thereon a statue to, say, Huey Long...

Under the restraints exercised by the people through their Constitution they couldn't do these things today. But if Congressional authority superseded our Fundamental Law and its Bill of Rights, all Congress would have to do would be to pass the necessary acts, and any or all of them would be accomplished.

Of course, no one would say that the present Congress would pass such acts, even if it had the power. But no one can say either what a future Congress, unrestrained by the Constitution, might attempt. Who, twenty-five years ago, could have imagined a Germany or a Russia governed as those nations are today? Unlimited power, granted to legislative groups and dictators, made it possible.

Don't let them scrap the Constitution, which has protected the rights of American citizens for a century and a half, and will continue to protect them as long as it is preserved!

"THE WHOLE WORLD"

These two headlines appeared recently in adjoining columns of a financial page:

"Hog Slaughter Smallest Since 1885, During June."

"Destroy 1,013,000 Bags of Coffee."

In the United States men who like to drink coffee have been killing baby pigs to keep up the price of pork. In Brazil men who like pork chops have been destroying coffee, 13,757,000 bags of it since June, 1931.

Brazil has been cutting down coffee trees to make way for cotton crops, planted because the United States has been plowing under cotton in order to keep up the price and thereby creating better markets for our Brazilian competitors. John Armstrong Chandler, who first asked "Who's loony now?" died the other day, an old man. But he lived to find that the answer to his query is: The whole world.—Manchester Union.
