The New York World-Telegram says of it: "an ingenius play-finds a welcome on Broadway"; and the Chicago Tribune, "The Curtain Rises rewards a full house with mirth" -and the Chicago American: "A humorous theatrical tale, humorously and theatrically told - good clean fun, pleasantly splashed with sentiment."

Jack Sturtevant, a director of the Little Theatre in Chicago, is directing this production. The players are

Vienna has been chosen as the background of this play, and the story is the age-old tale of an ugly duckling who later becomes the glamorous stage star, Fraulein Karling. Elsa Karling, as the play opens, is rich and independent, but lacks allure. She realizes this fact, and decides that she will buy what she wants, namely, romance. She has become stage-struck and in love with a popular matinee idol of the Vienese stage, one Wilhelm Meissinger, and determines to gain his love. She attempts to engage Wilhelm as a dramatic coach in the hope that she may arouse in him something of emotional interest in herself. Wilhelm, brought to Elsa's studio by a newspaper man, dodges
