BEDDING FOR DOGS

—by—
Albert Butterworth

Actually the accommodation and housing of the dog should engage ones attention before it is purchased, but it is often the case that the new addition to the family is acquired on the spur of the moment, leaving this very important consideration until after the need for it is expressed. A dog is a cheery, companionable sort of a soul, perhaps jealous of attention to others, including the family cat, and usually does not like to be deprived of his share of the entertainment and family life. At the same time, although he may like to occupy different parts of the house, he is extremely jealous of that particular spot which he has learned to look at as his own personal property. The first thing, then, is to locate some one place which may be reserved for the dog, and held sacred as such. It is not important just where this is, as long as it is not dark, damp, drafty, or away from the companionship that rightfully belongs to a member of the family.

As probably the greater number of dog-owners live in accommodations that are restricted, it may be just as well to consider their claims first. Just as one regards one's bed as his own property, so does the dog look upon his box, or kennel, and it should be insisted upon that he use it. It is important to see that the basket or box is large enough for the dog to lie in it without being cramped, and also that it is raised slightly from the floor, in order to avoid any unnecessary drafts. It should be cleaned thoroughly every day, or at least every other day, and scrubbed at least once every week. One of the best defenses we know today against infection and disease is complete cleanliness and hygiene. For many years it has been the popular idea that any old thing is good enough for the dog, and it has been only recently that the country has become more or less dog conscious and this idea has been exploded. However, it is not necessary to fix up a great deal of expense to furnish a good, substantial, clean bed for the dog, one that may be kept clean with a minimum of time and trouble. It is not even necessary to furnish blankets or cushions, when once the initial permanent bed has been constructed. Old newspapers are very good for laying on the floor of the kennel, if they are clean and dry, and the average household usually will have more than enough to provide for the comfort of the dog in this respect. However, they must be used generously, with plenty of thickness, otherwise their usefulness will be lost.

Out of consideration for the clothing of friends and visitors, as well as our own, the dog should not be allowed to occupy chairs and other articles of furniture where his hairs will shed.

Household Hints

Brown a tablespoon of sugar to caramelize it and add to vegetable soup or stew. The sugar makes the meat broth richer and browner, but because it has been caramelized does not add an unpleasant sweetness.

For a new sandwich filling, try crisp bacon broken into peanut butter.

When fruit juice is saved to supply the moisture for making cakes with fruit in them, a new flavor is added and the cake is considerably lighter.

Use grated egg as a garnish for mixed greens salad. Grate the whites first, then dust the yolks over the top. The effect is lovely.

Chopped nuts and dates are a delicious addition to whipped cream to be served on gingerbread or puddings.

Custard sauce flavored with lemon and almond extracts makes a tempting topping for baked, steamed or gelatin pudding.

Maple sugar mixed with soft butter is delicious served with hot waffles or pancakes.

Alternate layers of white and chocolate fudge in a shallow pan. Sprinkle with broken nuts mixed with chopped dates.

Cheese sprinkled over the top of mince pie before it is heated for serving gives a glossy top and delicious flavor.

Children's Department
Mrs. Price To Give Readings
On the coming Saturday, Jan. 25, at 10:30 a.m. there will be a delightful story hour in the auditorium of the Public Library. Mrs. R. H. Price of Highland Park will give a number of readings in Negro dialect. Mrs. Price, an authority on the subject, will read several "Uncle Remus" stories, and also the beloved little story of "Epimandoras." All interested are cordially invited.

Viking Exhibit
The mere mention of the "Vikings" brings to the imagination stories of daring and courage, of illustrious trips to far-away lands, visions of weather-beaten men on board sturdy ships with fancifully carved dragon heads.

The children's room is now showing an interesting display of various objects from these times. The large Viking ship, authentic in every detail, was made by fifth grade boys of Miss Parson's room at Elm Place school, also under the direction of Miss Turpin.

Noticeable among the many separate houses on the farm, is the great hall, the main building; the kitchen; the workshop; the different store houses; all built from simple logs with the exception of the bath house made of stone.

Recent Books Added in Public Library

Among the most interesting of the new books added recently to the Public Library collection, are the following titles:

"Color in Advertising," by Binder. This book, published first in Germany, gives the how, where and when of color appeal in advertising. It explains in simple terms and with striking illustrations, the reasons for the use of particular colors.

Technical Books
Elements of Yacht Design, by N. L. Skene. A handbook for both amateur and professional yachtsman, by a nationally known naval architect, which presents clearly the operations in designing yachts of all types.

"Introduction To Chinese Art," by Arnold Silcock. This book is an attempt to provide a simple picture of the environment of the Chinese people and their art.

Travel Books
"The Mexican Odyssey," by Bowman and Dickinson. This is an interesting and unique record of the experiences of these two young men, during their travels in Mexico in a battered and temperamental Ford.

"I Write As I Please," by Walter Duranty. A personal record of the author's experiences in and impressions of Soviet Russia, where he has lived since 1920 as Moscow correspondent for the New York Times.

"Desolate Marches," by L. M. Nesbitt. The author of "The Hell Hole of Creation," an engineer, describes his experiences in the Orinoco basin, the strange, once civilized section of Northern Venezuela.

"Bali, the Last Paradise," by Highkman Powell. The author describes in vivid detail the beauty of the natives and the simplicity of native life on the glamorous island of Bali in East Indies, one of the few spots on earth still untouched by civilization.

"Mrs. Astor's Horse," by Stanley Walker. A curious saga of American past, which gives America a chance to look at herself, and looking to chuckle or to groan, for the book shows American citizens in their absurd scrambling and amazing antics for amusement or fame or notoriety.

History

"The Texas Rangers," by Webb. From the time of their organization in 1835 until 1935, when they were absorbed by the State Highway Patrol, the Texas Rangers were the most active law enforcement agency in Texas. The story of their handling of frontier justice is good regional history, with many stirring adventure stories.

Biography
"Benes, Statesman of Central Europe," by Crabites. Benes, who has just been elected president of Czechoslovakia, is here portrayed as the leading exponent of peace in Europe.

"Victor Lawson," by Dennis. A biography of the late Victor Lawson, owner of the Chicago Daily News and founder and first executive head of the Associated Press.

"Portrait of a Family," by Eleanor Farjeon. A biography of the gifted and interesting Farjeon family, told by one of its members. Divided into five parts, it describes the lives, adventures and romance of the author's parents from the '50s through the '80s and the childhood days of the four children in the '90s.

"Prophets and Poets," by Andre Maurois. The author brilliantly describes the personalities and achievements of the writers, whom he has selected as having best expressed the thought of the last thirty years. Kipling, Shaw, Wells, D. H. Lawrence, Conrad, Aldous Huxley, Mansfield, and Strachey are shown as having offered a philosophy and heralded some change during this epoch.

Fiction

"Son of Marietta," by Fabricius.
"Jew of Rome," by Feuchtwanger.
"Star of the West," by Hueston.
"Shining Windows," by Norris.
"Floating Peril," by Oppenheim.
"Sound Wagon," by Stripling.
"The Lorenzo Bunch," by Tarkington.

"Luck of the Bodkins," by Woodhouse.
"Woolcott Reader," by Woolcott.
