

"THE GREAT WALTZ" IS MAMMOTH AND BEAUTIFUL

Young Johann Strauss conducts his father's orchestra, in his own new waltz—"The Beautiful Blue Danube."

While the gorgeous scenic effects in "The Great Waltz," Max Gordon's spectacular four star musical play that has scored an emphatic hit at the Auditorium Theatre, Chicago, are decidedly important to its success, they are by no means the sole reason for the enormous favor of this huge production from Radio City, New York.

Even greater reasons are the lilting strains of the two Strauss—father and son—light music that has never been equaled for sheer melody; the large operatic chorus that sings it perfectly; the augmented orchestra of symphonic quality; the radiant ballet staged by Albertina Rasch, with petite Vivien Fay as the prima ballerina; and most important of all the splendid performances of Marion Claire, as Rose, the sweetheart of young Johann Strauss; Guy Robertson, as Johann Strauss, Jr., and Gladys Baxter as the Countess Baranskaja, his Royal patroness.

Scenically, "The Great Waltz" is an absolute triumph. It is not only enormous but, Hassard Short, who directed the production for Max Gordon, has exercised rare good taste. The finale of the second act is without doubt the most magnificent scene that has ever been presented on any stage. Its moving orchestra stand, descending chandeliers, floating columns, waltzing couples—form a stage picture that must be seen to be appreciated. When the curtain falls, an enthusiastic audience applauds heartily and at the end of every performance there are at least a dozen curtain calls.

John D. Jones Dies Sunday, February 2

John D. Jones, a son of John S. and Nancy Dean Jones, was born at New Castle, Penn., on the 17th day of June 1867. He died Sunday Feb. 2, having reached the age of 68 years, 7 months and 16 days.

As a young lad he came to Chicago with his parents, where they spent a number of years. From Chicago they moved to Milwaukee. Later the family moved to North Dakota. About 1901 Mr. Jones came to Lake Forest, it was here that he met Mrs. Esther Tribbey Hardy. On Dec. 25, 1902, they were united in marriage. To this union, one son, Frank H., was born. In 1910 the family came to Highland Park, where they have resided throughout the past year. Mrs. Jones preceded her husband in death September 7, 1933.

Mr. Jones had always been in good health up to the time of his recent paralysis. He was very strong physically and enjoyed doing hard work. Even in his later years he was able to keep up with men who were much younger. Mr. Jones spent most of his life at the carpenter trade and was very active in maintaining and perpetuating the carpenter's union. For many years he acted as the recording secretary of the union to which he belonged. Aside from his regular trade he spent much time in study and in trying to develop and perfect certain devices whereby power might be produced economically. In spite of the fact that he suffered many defeats and discouragements in the development of some of his devices, he had great hopes of living to see the day when he would be able to offer the world something of great value. He had an undaunted spirit, that could not easily be conquered. He had an optimistic philosophy of life. He was easily satisfied and uncomplaining.

Mr. Jones was an enthusiastic follower of athletics. He spent much time in reading. He loved good music and enjoyed good speaking. He was always ready to express his appreciation to those who pleased him. He maintained a youthful spirit to the very end of his life. He attended the services of Bethany church, where he enjoyed worshipping with his friends.

Mr. Jones is survived by his son Frank H., and his foster daughter, Mrs. E. D. Fritsch. There are also four brothers, Ira, Jesse, William, and Taylor.

Funeral services took place on Wednesday at 2 p.m. at the Kelley Chapel with the Rev. H. M. Siemsen officiating. Interment took place at North Northfield.

Large Quantities of Calavos Now On Market

In line with the open season for "every man his own party chef," calavos are appearing in large quantities on the market again. Men are becoming more and more interested in cooking and serving special dishes in which they excel, as relaxation from humdrum daily occupations or as an outlet for their homespun instincts. Their desire to shine in this respect is echoed in such numbers of requests for information on the preparation and serving of calavos, that we herewith condense instructions so that "he who cooks" may read. For most purposes of serving, either on half shell, in slices, cubes, or ball form, first cut the calavo in halves lengthwise. Twist slightly to separate halves and remove seed with the aid of a sharp knife. For half shell service sprinkle with lemon juice and salt or serve with a wedge of lemon on a bed of water-cress or lettuce, with or without French dressing. The half shell service is properly accompanied with a spoon. Otherwise the valuable green layer, rich with minerals, which lies next to the skin, would not be easily available.

If the half shell salad is to form the main part of the menu, as is frequently the case in the buffet service man-made type of meal, the seed cavity is heaped with flaked sea food, with a single diced vegetable or fruit, or a combination of fruits or vegetables in contrasting piquancy, marinated in tart French dressing before being piled high on the half shell or with a dash or two of the dressing poured over the diced material in the shell.

If preferred the skin of the half shell may be removed by peeling, not with a knife, but deftly with the fingers, to assure the retention of the valued green outer portion. This allows service with the usual salad fork and permits consumption of the green garnish as well.

Calavos, properly softened for serving, are ready for a meal at a moment's notice. Here's a well known chef's idea of such a meal.
