

Passengers on "Nova Scotia" Reach Homes

American of the Munson line, which upon steaming out of Bermuda had scraped bottom on a coral reef, causing a leak in a bulk-head laden with oil ballast.

Describing the propeller accident to the S. S. Nova Scotia, Mr. Robertson said:

"The evening community sing was scheduled for 9 o'clock, in the lounge. The room was becoming well filled, although the ship was rolling a bit. A number of the passengers had quietly left the dining salon for their berths to accustom themselves to the roll of the ship."

"About 8:45 two members of the orchestra appeared—then, suddenly:

"Crash! The ship gave a rasping lurch ahead, then a retarding jerk, another lurch ahead, an ominous rumble, and then all was quiet."

"All this happened very quickly and to my amazement no one seemed excited. But, with the after calm, a few women decided that they had not acted as might be expected of their sex, so jumped up with a frightened 'O, dear what's that?' and other expressions of alarm."

"The guitar player averted a general rush, however, with a quick, 'Oh, this is nothing, we have this happen every trip.'

"So every one settled down to wait. The ship seemed to glide along without vibration, and our guitar player instilled complete assurance by adding:

"Oh, we just burned out another bearing."

"The community sing was started. Passengers who had retired to their cabins, a bit 'mal de merish,' now found 'that seasickness' was only a state of mind, and joined the crowd, either in the lounge or in the various groups in the corridors."

"Someone reported that two red lights (distress signals) had been hoisted. Deck hands were hastening hither and yon; the radio was snapping furiously and still nobody seemed unusually excited except the grass widow who was biting her finger nails."

"Various rumors flitted from group to group;—we had hit an uncharted coral reef—the propeller shaft had broken, the engine head had blown off. Also immediately two ships were reported to be very close by, both within 90 miles."

"In less than 10 minutes after the first crash, word was passed around for everyone to gather in the dining salon at once and the only rush of the evening started. No one wanted to miss the important announcement that was to be made."

"Captain Murphy appeared at once, very calm, very assuring. His announcement was brief."

"We have lost our propeller. We are 300 miles from Bermuda, 500 miles from Charleston. There are five ships very close to stand by if we need them. We will probably be towed to Newport News or to Bermuda. The Eastern Prince, of our line, en route from Trinidad to New York, will be here within four hours to take off our passengers or to tow us in."

"All this information within twenty minutes after the first crash. Marvelous. Everyone began to feel comfortable, now that they knew the situation."

"The bar crowd soon found its way back to favorite chairs. The older folk again retired and normally almost established itself. It was to be a sleepless night, however. With the closing of the bar at 11 p.m. a number of auxiliary bars became newly established in some of the cabins. Bottles of Scotch that were intended for the home folks were produced, along with limes, glasses and water bottles."

"A slap-stick pianist with a gift for popular airs was pushed to the piano and the sedate lounge became a riot. Everyone clamored for his favorite drunk song. Whiskey vendors appeared from thin air and the Boston socialite sang arm-in-arm with the scion from the lower Bronx."

"And, so on through the night, for this crowd there was to be no sleep and no sleep appeared to be necessary."

"At dawn the Eastern Prince appeared, a line was shot across; the steel tow cable finally made fast and off we headed for Bermuda at PRESS—22 seven knots an hour."

"The radio became hot with messages for anxious relatives. The most dashing charmer on the ship radiogrammed to her husband, 'Don't hurry, you are not a widower yet.'

A series of experiments has been started in Switzerland to determine the movement of glaciers. The tests will last 250 years.

Arden Shore

Arden Shore Camp, the summer haven for poor mothers and children, and in winter for undernourished boys, is situated on a wooded hill-top overlooking Lake Michigan near Lake Bluff. From the highest point down to the beach is a gradual slope suitable for skiing or sledging where the forty boys quartered in camp have literally been enjoying the time of their lives for the last two months.

For many of them, born and reared in city streets and alleys, it is their first acquaintance with snow in its natural state, unsmudged by soot and filth. For practically all of them it is their first opportunity to indulge in winter sports as there has not been such continuous cold weather within their memories. Their equipment donated largely by Arden Shore friends in Chicago and North Shore suburbs is not entirely adequate to accommodate the whole crowd at once, but boys who have been brought up in homes where there was never enough of anything, think half a pair of skis is better than none.

Out-of-door activities at Arden Shore camp are not compulsory. They don't need to be! Five minutes after the three o'clock bell has rung signifying the end of the two hour rest period, there is scarcely a boy to be seen lingering indoors no matter what the temperature. Sometimes however, one is forced to stay in by order of the nurse. Such a boy is Peter Petryneac, a seventeen year old Polish lad suffering from a serious throat ailment which cold winter air greatly aggravates. Peter, who was at the camp for two weeks, at the end of the last winter term, spent most of his summer in a charity ward of the Cook County hospital. He liked it there because he had a bed all his own, clean surroundings and plenty to eat which was more than he had ever had in the three room apartment which he shared with his parents and eight brothers and sisters. Furthermore in the occupational therapy department, he was taught to crochet rugs out of silk and cotton scraps and thus was given an opportunity to express his natural love of color.

When funds ran out however he was sent home with no assurance that he could survive a winter in that environment. In November he was chosen amongst others by the Chicago Board of Education to enjoy the benefits of Arden Shore camp which is supported by various associations in the city and North Shore suburbs. For a few weeks after his arrival he showed improvement but with the coming of severe weather his cough became worse and the doctor said a warmer climate was the only thing that would save his life.

Determined to find help in this unexpected emergency, Miss Anna Belle Ferrier, the camp director, appealed to the "Optimists," a club of philanthropic Chicago men, which had long been interested in the work at Arden Shore. The club promptly offered to finance the boy for several months in a sanitarium in Arizona or New Mexico.

Other friends of the Camp have expenses and have assembled a wardrobe for Peter. During the last days of preparation the boy scarcely hears the shouts of his comrades at play as he sits fingering maps and folders, trying to picture a place that will prove more helpful to him than the Cook County hospital and more wonderful than Arden Shore.

Shirley Mailfield celebrated her seventh birthday with twelve little guests Thursday.
