Phil Libby, Recipe Box Editor in Daily Broadcast

Out of his kitchen and into yours comes Mr. Phil Libby with a host of carefully hoarded secrets about cooking. Every week day morning with the exception of Saturday at 10:15 over station WCFL, "The Voice of Cookery" reveals the professional cooking secrets of a chef. . . confidential news concerning flavorings and delicious combinations of food that heretofore could be found only in the restaurants of continental hotels.

With years of experience in pleasing the discriminating palates of some of the world's most famous gourmets have given Mr. Libby a thorough knowledge of foods and different ways of preparing and serving them.

Understanding the limitations of the average kitchen, he has Americanized and simplified the recipes he presents over the air so that they can be prepared easily and quickly without great expense.

When asked what his favorite dish was, Mr. Libby replied with the remark that it was Broiled Steak ala Roquefort, a combination so flavorful, different and easy to prepare . . . yet so continental and pleasing in taste that no kitchen cookbook should be without it. Mr. Libby promises to pass on its secret of preparation during his subsequent broadcasts.

Employment Plan to Aid Supervisor in Relief Problem

State PWA officials today advanced an employment plan under which approximately 85,000 employables in Illinois, now receiving direct relief, may work in conjunction with PWA projects. The plan, which was announced by Charles E. Miner, deputy PWA administrator, is designed to assist township supervisors and other local officials charged since July 1 with the responsibility for local relief to employ on a work relief basis able-bodied persons, who are now receiving direct relief from state and local public funds.

Under the approved plan, chief purpose of which is to permit greater accomplishments on WPA projects, local relief officials in co-operation with local governmental units sponsoring WPA projects may assign persons from relief families to work on projects in return for the relief which they are receiving.

In making public the plan, Mr. Miner said that the persons so employed would not become WPA employees, but would be paid entirely from state and local relief funds on a so-called budget basis. The man-year costs of WPA projects cannot be increased. If additional materials or supervision are necessary on some projects because of the added workers they will be in addition to the sponsor's contribution toward the total project costs.

"Persons receiving jobs under the new procedure," he said, "will be paid prevailing wages the same as all WPA workers. The amount of work they perform in any month, however, will depend entirely upon their family relief budgets. Several township supervisors have already ordered all able-bodied relief clients to work for their relief."

"Making jobs available for these persons on WPA projects will mean increased community values from the WPA program and will provide work opportunities for thousands at a minimum of expense since WPA project organization and supervision is already established and operating."

The maximum employment figure of 85,000 under the new plan is based upon present family relief load of the state, which showed 145,000 families receiving public relief in June, of which 85,000 had employable members. The remaining 60,000 are classed as unemployable or "welfare" cases.

"So far as I know, Illinois is the first state in the Union to inaugurate such a plan," Mr. Miner said. "It will have the same practical effect as an increase in the WPA job quota. Hundreds of public improvements, heretofore impossible because of limitations of WPA funds, can now be made because of the additional workers."
