Furthermore, motorists are enjoined from starting up, even if the street car is in motion, until the passengers who alighted have reached a place of safety, which may be the safety zone or the curb.

These words have stressed the motorists' liability angle, but is well to remember that drivers mustin a sense-"look out" for pedestrians who all too often are careless of their own safety. You may have ist. to go a little further than merely "observing the law"-you may even have to risk damage to your car, but it will be worth it if you save
