Editorial

The government of the United States is a government of and by the people. Theoretically, each citizen has an equal voice in the shaping of the laws which govern him and determining the policy by which the country shall be guided.

It is impossible for these elected representatives to know accurately the wishes of the people on every question which comes up. Often matters of great importance arise after their election, matters upon which their constituents have expressed no views or opinions because the problems were not existent.

Therefore, it is the duty, and privilege, of each citizen to apprise his representatives in the government what is his stand on important questions. In no other way can government of and by the people in this country be successfully and faithfully carried out.

There is at present before the legislative bodies of the national government a question involving fundamental issues and principles of political philosophy—namely the balance of power between the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of the federal government.

Then when he has formulated his opinion he should let his representatives know what it is. In no other way can the shapers of our national destiny know with assurance the desires of the people they represent.

Write to the President, to your Senator, or your Congressman, telling them your stand on the proposed enlargement of the membership of the Supreme Court. They are your representatives whose job it is to carry out your best judgment of what is best for you and your fellow countrymen—let them know what that judgment is.

Mrs. May Williams Dies Thursday
