PRELIMINARY LESSONS IN LEARNING TO FLY by Taylor Cub

(This is the tenth of a series of brief informative lessons designed to form a complete ground school course in flying.)

X. On What Is Pointed Out the First Time Up

By this time the readers, whatever may be his or her degree of enthusiasm for this thing called flying, should have some idea of what flying is all about. But up to this point these brief articles have been informative only insofar as the automobile salesman at the auto show is informative. He describes to you the mechanical details of the engine and points them out by means of the cut-down section, but until you've mastered, let us say, how to start up a car from a standstill going up a steep grade, you can't call yourself a driver.

And so aloft we go!
Assuming you have already been up at least once just to get the general free-as-a-bird "feel" of flying, we shall now go up in earnest for the first real lesson in flying. You climb into the cockpit and sit down, strapping yourself in. Then your instructor climbs in, starts up the engine, asks you if you are ready, opens the throttle and takes off.

As soon as the plane has reached a safe height the pilot will begin your instruction by explaining to you the effect of the three major instruments for the controlling of the ship. These are the elevators, the ailerons and the rudder.

The elevators are the two movable plane surfaces that are parallel to the ground, one of them on either side of the rudder, which is perpendicular. These elevators are connected with and controlled by the stick in the cockpit. If this stick is moved forward the elevators are depressed. This causes the tail of the ship to rise, but from the pilot's seat the nose appears to go down. If the control column is moved back the elevators go up which causes the tail to go down, so the nose rises.

(Next week: "On More About Elevators and Ailerons.")

Perry Addelman to Explain Hospital Insurance Plan

For many years prior to the depression, but, particularly, during the depression, the middle income group of people in the United States has become more and more aware of the difficulty of obtaining necessary medical care at a cost which the family budget can meet. Wealthy people can easily pay bills of physicians and hospitals, and poor people are given this care without cost. But the burden of illness is one that strains the nerves and the pocket-books of members of the middle income group.

To help to obviate this difficulty, there has gradually evolved a Plan for Hospital Care, which is being satisfactorily worked out in Chicago and in some of its suburbs. A group of families pays a comparatively small sum per year and for this sum, any member of the group requiring hospital care within the year may have it free of charge for a period of twenty-one days. This is a type of insurance which relieves these families of the mental worry attendant on hospital costs, and assures them of adequate care. A saving of more than $120 for the first twenty-five patients who received this care, was announced by its director, Perry Addelman, executive secretary of the Hospital Insurance Corporation of Chicago, with testimonial letters from the individuals treated praising the arrangement.

Mr. Addelman will explain the working of this plan, and tell how it can be applied to the local situation, at the last lecture of the Thursday evening lecture series sponsored by the Adult Education Council of Highland Park, Thursday evening, April 1, in the English club room at the high school, at 8:15 p.m.
