ACTRESS BAFFLED BY NEW KIND OF SPINACH

Spinach Without Sand Sounds Too, Too Divine—But How Come? Actress Wonders.

Chicago, April 8.—Gladys Oliver, actress, who cooks her own meals couldn't believe her lovely blue eyes last night.

For Gladys had bought her first box of Birds Eye Spinach. And though she looked high and low, inside and out, nary a single grain of sand could she find in it.

It seems these Birds Eye people are sticklers for cleanliness. They begin by throwing out all stalks and yellow leaves—which totals 40% of the spinach. And next they proceed to wash every individual leaf in cool, sparkling water.

Birds Eye Spinach. In a bath like that there simply isn't a Chinaman's chance of any sand being left in the spinach.

Raised in special nooks Birds Eye Spinach is raised in special nooks of the country to bring out a fuller flavor, a richer color. When the spinach reaches its flavor peak it is picked, cut, washed and packaged in such a hurry you'd think a thunder-storm was coming up.

For spinach is tickle. It begins deteriorating within 5 hours after picking.

ing. Ordinary spinach, even in summer, takes from 12 to 72 hours to reach the market. In that time the flavor has begun to disappear...

But the Birds Eye crowd have licked this problem proper. They have a patented process called Quick-Freezing. The machines are located right at the field. The spinach is rushed into them—and whizz! At the split-second it is subjected to Arctic cold applied with the speed of light!

This patented process of Quick-Freezing is used for all Birds Eye foods. It is the only way on record that brings you spinach as fresh and green as the minute it left the farm.
