Hold Demonstrations of Weed Control in Central Illinois

The State Department of Agriculture, working with the College of Agriculture of the University of Illinois, has begun a series of weed control demonstrations in Central Illinois. The first meetings, held this week at Pleasant Plains and Shelbyville, took up the problem of controlling field bindweed and Canada thistle, two weeds which infest many fields in the central part of the state.

L. A. Moore, superintendent of the State Division of Plant Industry, finds a keen interest among farmers in the subject of weed control. "While Canada thistle, perennial sow and field bindweed are the only ones named in the Illinois Noxious Weed Law, eight others are listed in House Joint Resolution No. 25, which was adopted by the General Assembly at the request of Gov. Horner," Mr. Moore said. "To control weeds is simply good farming, and personal and community pride should be incentive enough to cause every land owner to keep his premises clean."

The use of both chemical and mechanical methods of weed control are being demonstrated at these meetings.

Property Owners Given Chance to Control Neighborhood

Michigan has just enacted a Neighborhood Improvement Act, first of its kind in the United States. The act, strongly supported by the Michigan Real Estate association, is an enabling act designed to open the way for co-operative action by property owners which would help cities to attack the huge problem of growing urban blight. It is designed to give an effective instrument through which neighborhood action may be undertaken to so establish the character of a neighborhood as to make possible its best economic use.

The act would authorize action in the various cities of the state to identify neighborhoods as such, and to work out a plan for protection of the character of the neighborhood and/or for its improvement, this action to be in coordination with the general city plan, and using the existing city machinery.

The measure enacted by Michigan follows without amendment the proposed enabling act suggested for state study, and action by the National Association of Real Estate study of the problem cities now face in the rehabilitation of existing urban regions that normally would find their best economic use as home neighborhoods.

The plan is actively under study in a number of states.

VIRGINIA SAATHOFF ENGAGED

Hinman Ave., in Evanston No Longer Thru Street on R. 42

Hinman avenue in Evanston is no longer a "through street" because of a change in the routing of state route 42 through Evanston effected recently by the State Highway department, it was announced this week by the traffic division of the police department.

Hinman avenue has been the south-bound route 42 for some time, and was therefore protected by stop bound traffic on route 42 followed Sheridan road to Burnham place, Burnham to Forest avenue, and Forest back into Sheridan road. Route 42 traffic going both north and south will hereafter be routed along the latter route, eliminating the divided routing that included the use of Hinman avenue.

Emphasis on the discontinuation of Hinman avenue as a "through street" was placed by the police department accident prevention bureau. The lack of stop signs along this street to protect it from cross traffic will require lower speeds than in the past, it was pointed out. This street has for years borne a heavy and relatively fast volume of through traffic entering Evanston from both north and south on Sheridan road.

Signs reading "Not a protected street" are being erected along Hinman avenue by the police department to warn the motorist who is accustomed to relying on stop signs at cross streets for protection. According to the State Highway department, the stop signs are being removed gradually, with protection retained at some of the more important intersections for the time being. The street is not, however, an official through street, it was emphasized.

Walk On Left Side Of Highway Is Advice

Springfield, Ill., (Special)—Pedestrians walking on rural highways are required by law to keep to the left side of the road, declared Secretary of State Edward J. Hughes in a safety bulletin issued here today.

According to Secretary Hughes, Article X, Section 78 of Illinois revised statutes, provides that "it is the duty of any person walking along and upon improved highways to keep on the left of the paved portion, or on the shoulder thereof, and upon meeting a vehicle when walking on the said paved portion to step off to the left."

Declaring that walking on highways is exceptionally dangerous, Secretary Hughes said most pedestrians will be quick to perceive that this law is enacted for their welfare and will therefore abide by it.
