

EARLY OIL STRUGGLE MAKES GREAT DRAMA

A vivid re-enactment of the battles fought over the world's first oil pipe line is an exciting feature of the big new cinema production, "High, Wide and Handsome."

Randolph Scott, as an oil pioneering Pennsylvania farmer, carries the brunt of the fight for control of the oil industry.

Lovely Irene Dunne has in the new picture probably the greatest role of her brilliant career.

First Pipe Line Depicted in Exciting Film Play

By LATTIMER SHAW

ONE of the most dramatic pages of American history—the discovery of oil and the birth of the gigantic oil industry—has at last engaged the attention of genius. The result is a magnificent and thrilling motion picture, "High, Wide and Handsome," which will entertain countless millions throughout the world during the next twelve months.

The story is that of the Tide Water Associated Oil Company and the desperate conflict between its Pennsylvania farmer pioneers, struggling to build a great pipe line to get the world's first oil down to tide water, and the transportation interests fighting for control of the industry in the years following the discovery of "God's Gold" at Titusville, Pa., in 1859.

Produced by Paramount, "High,

Wide and Handsome" is a return to the "colossal" scale of movie making, with an enormous cast, lavish sets, great location panoramas and quick violent action. The story was dramatized by Oscar Hammerstein II with five special songs by Jerome Kern, the pair who turned out "Show Boat." The cast is headed by Irene Dunne, star of "Cimarron" and other great pictures, Randolph Scott and Dorothy Lamour with 86 other well known players in name roles backed by thousands of extras.

Opening at the Astor Theater in New York, July 21, it will complete its run there and then go on its way around the world spending four or five months in two score key cities before being seen in the smaller communities.

Miss Dunne, a medicine show entertainer stranded in Titusville, Pa., marries Randolph Scott, a young farmer, while he is experimenting with the world's first oil well. From there the story moves rapidly into the vicious struggle between the oil drilling farmers and their commercial enemies. Battles with blacksnake whips, shotguns, stones and wrenches are depicted with vivid action and beautiful photography.

Workers are attacked and slain and locomotives haul the pipe from the earth. In the face of this violence the farmers carry on and build the world's first pipe line across rivers and over mountains to the refinery at Bayonne, N. J.

The story of that heroic struggle was taken almost directly, incident by incident, from the romantic annals of the Tide Water Associated Oil Company whose pioneers built this first pipe line to the sea. That original pipe line laid at so great cost is still in existence today and still is bearing the priceless Pennsylvania crude across the Alleghenies to Tide Water's Bayonne plant where it is refined into Vedol motor oil and Tydol gasolines.

Cost of Owning "Family Car" Less Than in Early Days

The cost of owning and operating a "family car" is less than half of what it was back in the early part of the century, according to George Barton, chief engineer of the Chicago Motor club.

The lower purchase price of the current vehicle and the tremendous reduction in tire prices are two of the outstanding reasons for the reduced prices of today, Mr. Barton declared.

"In a 1909 issue of the American Motorist, official publication of the American Automobile association," Mr. Barton said, "we find a complete statement of costs kept by one of the early 'motoring suburbanites,' who checked up to find how much it cost him to move away from the city.

"In the first place, the 1909 motorist had to pay $2,500 for his car, whereas the motorist today can buy a comparable vehicle new for about $800 to $1,000. Here is how some of the 1909 costs compare with today's motoring costs:

spite the rising tax costs, the average cost of gasoline to today's motorist is substantially less than it was in 1909.
