tion and another, providing for additional farm to market highways.

His support of educational measures in the house earned him the praise of the Illinois Education association. After thanking Representative Keller for his support of all public education bills, R. C. Moore, executive secretary of the association wrote:

"It was also evident that you studied all school measures with an open mind and gave strict attention to your committee work and the debates on the floor of the house.

"I hope your constituents will keep you in the General Assembly as long as you care to serve them and that you will continue to give to the schools the excellent service you gave this year."

The early influence attained by Representative Keller in the house is indicated by the important committee assignments given him in his first term. Joseph F. Elward

Joseph F. Elward has launched his campaign for the Democratic nomination for Congress from the 10th Illinois District.

Elward has been actively practicing law in Chicago for 22 years. A great many of his clients are retail merchants and small business men who, he says, have not been able to get the proper financial assistance from the recognized loan agencies during the slack periods of the year. He feels that this is inequitable and that an effort should be made to give the small business man the same credit facilities that his larger and wealthier competitor now enjoys. Elward has committed himself to the program that if elected to Congress, he will set to work to do everything possible to remedy this condition.

In addition to his extensive experience in the legal profession, the candidate has been for many years a professor of the law of real estate in a Chicago Law School. The knowledge and experience he has acquired in that way has made him particularly anxious to stop the many abuses that have occurred in this field and to do something about securing adequate returns to bondholders and real estate investors.

Elward resides in his own home at 6642 Bosworth avenue, Chicago, Illinois, with his wife and two children. This is the first time he has ever sought public office. He has been endorsed as a candidate by the regular Democratic organization of the 10th District. This District comprises all of Lake county, and in Cook county, the North Shore Towns, Evanston, Rogers Park and Lake View.
