Several reasons are evident as to why American money is being invested in British television. The British are able to enjoy four hours a day of television that is as clear as any motion picture. As far as is known there are over nine thousand private receiving sets in London alone. At the present time in America the largest interests experimenting in television are largely controlled by motion picture industries who are in no hurry for television. Furthermore the only method of television production that is capable of presenting a direct continuity picture over television is not controlled by these concerns. In short those at present representing American television are skeptical about opening up a field that they are unable to keep control of, in addition to spending the death knell of the movies.
