Collegiate News

About this time of the year begins a steady exodus of socially or academically ambitious boys and girls, (who would really prefer being termed college men and women), toward their prospective year's work or play. An attempt to chronicle their various destinations and ambitions is being presented this week and next. We do not claim the list to contain the names of all students but we are attempting to have it as complete as possible. If you know of any student who is going to school won't you please give us a ring next week.

Marcello (Brains) Rollery, who might best be termed an exuberant talker is studying law at Alfred university, Alfred, New York. Brains left Highland Park yesterday in order to be back at school in time for football practice this fall. To the uninitiated it might prove difficult to imagine a law student having exceptional ability on the football field—not so for those who know Brains, however.

John Laurie and Marshall Johnson will leave for Crawfordsville, Indiana September 10. The boys intend to study a liberal arts course there at Wabash college.

Dorothy Keefe left Wednesday for a short visit in Michigan, after which she will proceed to Pembroke Hall, Providence, Rhode Island. Dot is a mite of a girl who tried to acquire a suntan this summer—the only trouble was that it came in the form of a very thick coating of freckles.

William Schmidley, well known among his friends for his ability to clown and still retain a high scholastic average, has already returned to Washington and Jefferson college in Pennsylvania. Bill plans to eventually teach German so let's start rolling our r's. Due to world conditions Bill was unfortunately unable to participate in a year's exchange study in Germany. However, he's already forgotten that and is quite busy planning his activities as the house manager of his fraternity.
