Armistice Day

Again we bow our heads in silent prayer;
For boys who fought across the seas;
A martial music sends its tones about
And filters through November's breeze;
The leaves are seared throughout the forest's depths
And flowers are sleeping in their beds,
The colors of the summer days are gone,
We see no more the gaudy reds
And brighter tones that make the warmer days
But all the earth seem brown and sear,
The skies are gray throughout the autumn hours
In mourning of the soldier's brier

And yet, is not time to grieve and weep
Because a group of boys are gone,
They fought a gallant battle over there
And they were sent with cheer and song;
And so we all should sing a song of praise,
They did their work—we need not weep—
But shout their praises to the November's skies,
For they have simply gone to sleep;
And they are resting after tasks performed
And o'er their beds the poppies grow,
The breezes bless them while, they pause to sleep
In France beneath the sun's bright glow.
