Heirs With Him

'Twas Christmas day—the bright sun shone Upon that sheet of white—the glittering snow— And in our home the Yuletide cheer Accompanied the hard December blow The childrens' faces all were tight And kindly smiles were mingled with the joy That seems to come at Christmas Day In honor of the birth of One Small Boy.

But suddenly a tear was seen: Our Marion was sitting in deep thought; With toys and dolls upon the floor The spirit of Christ Child she had caught. And picking up her finest toy She left the house and started down the street And laid that doll upon the no Of one who had no toys—no bread—no meat.

She brought the child into our house And shared our bounteous Christmas tree In honor of the birth of One Who did the very same for you and me. He shared His all and made us heir To all the blessing of a Christian life; Can we do less than our small share In making happy those who bear great strife.

—Franklin Lee Stevenson.
