This Week in Washington

by Ralph E. Church
 Representative, Tenth Congressional District

Washington, D. C., April 8.—What should be the foreign policy of the United States? That is one of the most difficult questions, certainly the most delicate, this Congress has to answer.

On a number of occasions, formally and informally, the President has expressed his objections to our existing neutrality law. At the present time the Senate Foreign Relations Committee is engaged in holding public hearings on the subject. We may reasonably expect that before many days the question will be directly before Congress itself. If and when the question reaches the floor of the Senate in the form of a bill reported by the Foreign Relations Committee, we may also expect somewhat extended and bitter debate. And that debate will have its repercussions in London, Paris, Berlin, Rome, Warsaw, Moscow and Tokio and possibly add to the delicacy of the international situation.

All seem agreed that the first objective is to keep from becoming involved in a European war, and at axis would ultimately endanger our own safety and security, and Mr. Baruch apparently believes there can be no dangers so long as we adequately defend this hemisphere.

Inasmuch as all our sympathies are with China and with England and France as against Rome and Berlin, there seems to be a growing sentiment in favor of the thesis of Mr. Stimson. We naturally abhor the thought that American materials are used to destroy China and that American materials assist in the acts of aggression by Mussolini and Hitler. If we adopt the Stimson doctrine, there are certain very important questions we must be prepared to answer.

In vesting authority in the President to declare an embargo against an aggressor nation, what will be our definition of an "aggressor?" The delegated power must have some rule or standard on which the President is to act. Shall we define by law that an aggressor is any nation who violates any treaty it has with the United States? If we take this definition, then we have to decide whether it sufficiently covers the situation with which we are confronted today. Or shall we say that an aggressor nation is one that violates any treaty? If we take trality is an almost unobtainable ideal," pointing out that "it is easier to proclaim neutrality than to maintain it" and "its practice is almost as difficult as its definition."

Moonlight Sonata Now Showing at Deerpath Theatre

Music such as has never been heard on the screen before is provided by Ignace Jan Paderewski, the world-famous pianist who stars in his first and only picture, "Moonlight Sonata," playing at the Deerpath Theatre Friday and Saturday, April 21 and 22. Fine portrayals are given by Charles Farrell, Marie Tempest, Barbara Greene and Eric Fortman.

Playing Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, April 23, 24 and 25 in a double feature program are "Honolulu" and "St. Louis Blues."

Eleanor Powell, acknowledged to be the world's most accomplished tap dancer, proves her title again in "Honolulu." This lavish new musical has all that the Broadway shows of modern times can offer and more. Robert Young has the male lead in a dual role, carrying the pleasantly light weight of a

Together again as man and wife after a long separation, Ruggles and Miss Boland go through the most hilarious experiences of their careers as the couple who adopt two boys only to have the wild youngsters take over the household in its entirety. Donald O'Connor, the youngster who scored in Bing Crosby's "Sing You Sinners" and "Men With Wings," and Billy Lee, who "lollypopped" his way through the recent "Say It in French," the the boys of the Cut from the center of your Tender Made Ham a good steak at least 1 to 1½ inches thick. Place the ham steak in a shallow greased baking dish, and spread over it a mixture of 2 tablespoons of lemon juice, a teaspoon of prepared mustard, half a teaspoon of brown sugar and an eighth of a teaspoon of paprika. Heat the steak in a very hot oven—450°—for only 12 minutes.

Select the potatoes that are dry and floury when boiled. When cooked, put them through the ricer or a food mill. Add a generous lump of butter and some hot milk. Beat thoroughly with spoon or fork, and set, covered, on a low flame for a few minutes.

Buy the peas in the pods. Cook in a moderate amount of water, with a teaspoon of salt, a teaspoon of brown sugar, a couple of sprigs of mint, and a few of the pods. This will restore their natural flavor for sweetness.

—how is that most likely to be accomplished in this day of militarism and aggression? What is the best course to pursue? On that question even our outstanding authorities on foreign affairs are in disagreement.

Last Wednesday former Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. If I interpret his testimony correctly, he takes the position that the United States should stop all shipments of materials to aggressor nations, leaving it to the President to determine what nation is an aggressor. On the other hand, Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, who appeared before the Senate Committee on the following day as an authority in international affairs, took the position that we should simply sell to any nation who pays cash and ships the materials in its own boats. That, he maintains, is the only way we can remain neutral, regardless of where our sympathies may be.

Thus, on two successive days the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations heard two eminent citizens, both close students of international affairs, advocate two different policies. Mr. Stimson believes that the success of the Rome-Berlin-Tokio the position of serving as policeman for the world.

There is another problem not easy of solution. What materials shall we refuse to sell to aggressors? Obviously, airplanes, tanks and guns are munitions of war. But also essential to a nation at war are cotton and wheat. Food is as important to sustaining an army as the guns it carries. And what about chemicals and medical supplies?

I present these questions simply to show, if I can, how extremely difficult it is to find a complete and wholly satisfactory solution. Mr. Baruch was expressing a fundamental truth when he said: "True neu-

"St. Louis Blues" a motion picture inspired by the unforgettable song of the same name, more than lives up to the high standard set for it by its famous predecessor! With Dorothy Lamour, Lloyd Nolan, Tito Guizar, Maxine Sullivan and Mary "Punkins" Parker forming a star-studded cast. With hit songs, gay comedy and the local color of the Mississippi sprinkled about in liberal quantities, "St. Louis Blues" tells a romantic story of a Broadway celebrity who runs away from fame, glamour and applause to find real love aboard a down-at-the-heels showboat.
