8. Annual Flowers Give Added Beauty

Let me remind you of a few fundamentals that folks often overlook in laying out their flower borders.

The first of these fundamentals is that flowers should be massed. They look a lot more striking when they're planted in beds and clumps, a number of the same variety together, rather than in long thin lines or scattered here and there. The second is that flowers always appear to better advantage if they have a background, such as a green hedge to make their lovely colors stand out. Woodbine or some other hardy climber on a wooden fence will give you the same effect.

In laying out flower borders it's important to remember to get them in the right scale for your garden. Remember that if they're less than four feet wide they don't let you get good mass effects with your flowers and if they're more than ten or twelve feet wide they're pretty hard to cultivate. As far as shape is concerned, I think curving outlines are usually more graceful and less monotonous.

Prepare Seed Bed

Make sure that your soil is neither very sandy nor too heavy with clay, and pulverize it very thoroughly before planting. Flower seedlings are so tiny that they just can't get along without food, either. They need eleven different food elements from the soil, and a lack of even one of these will cause trouble. So when you're preparing the seed bed, mix in some complete plant food—a food that supplies all eleven of the food elements growing things need from the soil in scientifically balanced proportions. Four pounds of food per 100 square feet—that's about a pint of it to every five by five plot—is a fine square meal for your flowers.

As for how to plant different varieties of flowers, it's a good idea to buy well-known, reliable brands of seeds, and follow the directions on the back of the packet carefully.

Most Annuals Sun-Lovers

Quite a few folks have had bad luck with their annuals because they forgot one fact—that most of these flowers need a lot of sun. If you want to grow flowers in partial shade, though, here are some good varieties for the purpose: snapdragons, corn-flowers, forget-me-nots, and pansies. Certain other varieties can stand long dry spells better than others, too. My experience has been that calendula, petunias, verbena, portulaca, centaurea, scabiosa, larkspur, and gillardia are the best of these.

Here's an interesting fact about flowers. For some reason, it tires flowers to form mature seeds, and once you let the blossoms wither on the plant and go to seed, the flowers are likely to stop blooming. So it pays to cut them regularly. Plant them carefully, weed them regularly, water them thoroughly, and cut them when they blossom. Following these four rules, plus one more—feed them a square meal—will give you a lovely flower garden this year and every year.
