

Birds Common in Illinois, Disappearing Say Research Workers

Many of the birds common in Illinois years ago have either disappeared entirely or else are greatly diminished in number, say research workers of the Federal Writers' Project, W.P.A., who have compiled a guide book to the State.

On a summer day in 1871, Robert Ridgway, famous ornithologist of Richland county, observed 145 species of native and migratory birds in the prairies and woods west of Olney, according to an authority. Among these were Baltimore orioles, warbling and red-eyed vireos, mocking birds, brown thrashers, yellow-breasted chats, field sparrows, chowinks, cardinals, Bob Whites, white-eyed vireos, Bell's vireos, vermilion tanagers, blue jays, red-headed woodpeckers, Dick Cissels, Henlow's buntings, yellow-winged sparrows, prairie larks, meadow larks, swallow-tailed kites, and ravens.

Other writers of the period noted the abundance of wild fowl in the rice fields along the Illinois river, and tell of seeing cranes, gallinules, coots, wood ducks, mallards, teal, snipes, bitterns, blue herons, snowy egrets, mud hens, bluebills, spring-tails, greenwings, brants, sandhill cranes, white swans, white pelicans, wild geese, and hooded mergansers.

Annual Board Picnic at Arden Shore Camp

Several hundred women, including board members and others interested in Arden Shore camp, will gather on Monday, July 17th, for the annual board picnic at the camp. The picnickers bring their own lunches but are served coffee by the camp. This year's picnic will be enjoyed from the vantage of new picnic tables and benches donated by the various village committees. Following luncheon al fresco under the trees, the 500 campers, including mothers and children of all ages, present stunts illustrative of their activities at camp. Two thousand campers are accommodated at Arden Shore during each summer season, 500 at a time, for a fortnight stay.

Mrs. Robert B. Gregory is honorary president of the Arden Shore association, and Mrs. John E. Davis is president.

Mrs. S. H. Bingham is chairman of the Highland Park committee of the association, and Mrs. Charles Bates is Ravinia chairman.
