OLYMPIC HURDLES

"Finals in the 400 meter hurdles!"

The announcement, made in French, was immediately translated into English for the many Britons and Americans in the stadium. Colombes, France, who were there to witness the events of the third day of the 1924 Olympic games. The Americans' attention focussed on the starting line where three of their fellow-countrymen, with Andre of France, Vilen of Finland, and Blackett of Great Britain, were to compete in the final grueling test.

The three Americans were all products of the Middle West, and two of them, Taylor and Brookins, were Iowans. They had been rivals for a long period before their participation in the Eighth Olympiad. Their Olympic duel had started in the final heat of the American Trials at Harvard Stadium several weeks before, when Brookins had been favored to win, but Taylor had beaten him to the tape in a close finish. Then, just yesterday, here at Colombes, the tables had been turned and Brookins had won his heat in the semi-finals with Taylor at his heels for second place, Ivan Riley of the Illinois Athletic Club of Chicago had won the second heat over Blackett of Great Britain, to give the United States the third qualifier in the finals.

Who would take the finals? The crowd waited eagerly for the answer as many tongues in many languages discussed the event. The starter placed the six finalists in their respective places. Then a brief moment when the athletes leaned forward for the start. The report of a pistol—and six athletes leaped forward, almost as a unit.

Taylor and Brookins were taking the hurdles with perfect timing, and all the men were running well. Like greyhounds they came down the track, leaping over the hurdles in stride. Once, in the heat of competition, Taylor knocked over a hurdle and was temporarily thrown off balance, but righted himself marvelously and pressed on.

Near the finish line it was the Americans, Taylor and Brookins again, fighting, straining, putting everything they had into those last terrific strides. In the end it was F. Morgan Taylor of Grinnell College, Iowa, who broke the tape first, with Charley Brookins of the University of Iowa a close second.

Taylor's time of 52 3-5 seconds was the fastest time that had ever been made for that distance. Unfortunately Charley Brookins was disqualified. It was ruled that he had not taken one hurdle cleanly.

The victory in the hurdles seemed to inspire the entire United States team. They went on to win the Olympiad with 255 points, to Finland's 166, and Great Britain's 85%.

H. P. Youths Spend Week with Music Campers in New York

Charlotte Getz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Getz of 64 Clifton; Morton Raff, son of Mr. Arthur Raff of 245 Cedar; and James Krohn, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Krohn of 401 South Sheridan road—who have been studying at the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Michigan—spent the week of August 14 with the Music Campers at the New York World's Fair. There the Camp orchestra, band, choir, and ensembles were presented in a series of ten major concerts, three broadcast over coast to coast networks.

Charlotte, who is a third season Musiccamper, has made an enviable record this summer. As a member of the newly established drama guild under the direction of Stewart Bosley and Douglas Ferguson of the Yale School of Drama and of Broadway, she was starred in two Playhouse productions, on the staff for others. She was chosen by popular elections to represent the Girls' Camp in New York, served as secretary of the Girls' Council, won the tennis tournament, and took a first place in the swimming meet.

For musical activities, Charlotte played in the 150 piece orchestra broadcasting weekly over a major network, and studied violin with Boris Schwarz of the Toscanini NBC Symphony.

Both Morton and James played in the violin section of the National High school orchestra and studied violin with Mr. Schwarz. At one time Morton assumed the responsible position of assistant concert master, achieved in competitive tryouts. In the fall he will enter Swarthmore college.

James under the supervision of the athletic counselor was awarded the Junior Lifesaving Certificate of the Red Cross, and achieved placings in both track and swimming meets.
